Berlin, May 22 — It is announced that the trials of the electro-magnetic cannon invented by Prof. Birkeland have been so successful that a German firm has offered to purchase the system. The proposal will be placed before a company which has been formed at Christiania for the development and improvement of the invention.

In the meantime arrangements are on foot to test the power of the gun to fire a projectile of two tons a distance of twelve and a half miles, which the inventor asserts it can do. The Norwegian Company, however, has not been able to raise the 27,500 necessary to carry on the test.

The Norwegian experts are confident that this cannon will effect a revolution equal to that caused by the invention of gunpowder. According to Prof. Birkeland's calculations, the firing capacity of a cannon increases with the length of the barrel. A gun with a barrel of 32 feet 10 inches could fire a two-ton projectile 93 miles, which would enable the French to bombard London from Calais.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY ELECTIONS YESTERDAY

Special to The Times.

Regina, N.W.T., May 21—A general election for the Northwest Legislative Assembly is progressing to-day. Reports to hand indicate there will be very few changes in the new assembly. The votes of the several thousand new voters along the Crow's Nest Pass Line may affect the result in Premier Haultain's constituency, Macleod, though it is believed he will be re-elected by a safe majority.

Winnipeg, Man., May 22—Latest returns show that the Government has probably been sustained in the elections held in the Northwest yesterday. It will be several days before returns will be in. A forecast of the result, which was carefully prepared, indicates that few changes are likely.

CANADA AND THE MUNROE DOCTRINE

Prominent Philadelphia Paper Answers Goldwin Smith

THINGS ONE CANNOT FORESEE

There is no Probability of Any Hitch in Consequence of the Enforcement of the American Theory

Special to The Times.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 22.—The Public Ledger says: Newspapers in Canada and England are discussing the Monroe doctrine in a new light. Professor Goldwin Smith, in a letter to the London Daily News questions whether Canada will ever be permitted to "engage in any British war by which she would bring war into this continent," meaning the American continent. Former Secretary of State John W. Foster, discussed the same question some time ago. Suppose England should become involved in war with Russia, France, Germany or a coalition of the Powers, Canada, as an ally of England, would be subject to attack and possibly of seizure. Would the United States permit Canada to pass under the dominion of some other Power? This settlement of the conflict would undoubtedly be an extension of the European and monarchical system to this hemisphere in defiance of the warning long ago given by President Monroe. The Monroe Doctrine especially disclaimed any intention of interfering with existing conditions, but made it plain that interference by others, such as the transfer of Canada, would be regarded as a menace to the peace and safety of the United States.

The possibility of any such a result as the capture of Canada seems rather remote, but the political speculators points out that if England had become involved in a European war in consequence of the Boer war, or the controversy with Russia over China and the occupation of Manchuria, hostilities would have taken place in Canada. What attitude would the United States assume in the case of the defeat of England and the conquest or cession of canada, and how can our course be forecasted by an interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine? It cannot be foreseen at all. There is no general consen about the extent of the Monroe Doctrine. Secretary Olney, in the Venezuelan incident, declared that the United States was the paramount nation in this hemisphere, and that its fiat was law. He gave the Monroe Doctrine the widest scope ever attributed to it by any American Secretary of State in official correspondence, and others might be more cautious or even bolder. The Monroe Doctrine is a convenient thing to have around. Just such intrepretation may given to it as the necessities of the case require. If the nation happened to be opposed to the transfer of Canada to any other power, ample warrant could be found in the Monroe Doctrine for opposing the change. In any case our action would be determined by the sentiment about the question, and it may be said that, as a practical question, the implanting of any other Power in Canada would be likely to meet with so much opposition that it would not be done speedily. At present however, the subject is not of pressing importance.

Rival to Salt Combine

Los Angeles, Cal., May 21 — The California Salt Company, of which Mr. Thomas E. Metcalf of this city is president, promises to develop into a formidable rival of the salt combine, which until recently was believed invincible and in entire control of the field. The California company, however, has acquired control of the great salt bearing lands of San Diego county and is now expending a large amount of money on its properties. Several large solar evaporation plants have been established and more are being constructed. The present output is estimated to be about 50,000 tons of salt a year, and these figures probably will be doubled at an early date through the extensions and additions now under way.

MAJOR MILLERS MASS MEETING LAST NIGHT

Messrs. J. W. Garvin, R. M. Dennistoun and the Candidate were the Speakers

A LARGE AUDIENCE PRESENT

The Major Receives an Enthusiastic Reception—Mr. Garvin Holds That He is Right in the Matter of Clegg's Salary

The mass meeting held in the opera house last night in the interests of Major Miller, the Liberal Conservative Candidate was largely attended and although none of the big guns of the Conservative Party were present, the Major received very substantial support by local friends. Considerable enthusiasm was in evidence, and the several speakers held the earnest attention of a large audience throughout the whole proceedings. Mr. T. E. Bradburn officiated as chairman, and announced that on Saturday evening next Mr. F. D. Monk, leader of the Conservative Party in Quebec, will deliver an address in the room connected with the conservative committee rooms in the opera house building.

MR. R. M. DENNISTOUN

The first speaker was received with prolonged applause. Referring to the ministerial talent at the services of the Provincial Secretary, he trusted that Mr. Miller would not in any way suffer from a lack of similar oratorical talent. Going at length into the long term of office enjoyed by the present government, he said one would hardly find in the history of the world a responsible government enjoying the confidence of a people for 31 years. He explained that the British North American Act especially provided that the term of office for any government without an appeal to the country should not exceed four years; but in the face of this the Ross government had in 1891 extended their term. This Act he claimed to be unconstitutional. The principle of a Referendum has never been used in Australia as claimed by the Liberal Party; the Act in that colony provides that it is simply to be brought into requisition for the purpose of avoiding a deadlock in administering the affairs of the country. If this Prohibition is allowed it will mean setting a precedent for any government to shirk responsibility for any perplexing measure by referring it to the people under the name of a Referendum. Continuing, he denied the absolute truth of the record of the Ross government as published in the Peterborough Examiner of May 20th. He claimed that public opinion in this Province is generally turning over in favor of the Conservative Party as evidenced by the elections of four years ago. He denounced the burning of the West Elgin ballots within a stones throw of the legislative hall itself as an Act never equalled in political history. Admitting that in regard to advanced legislation the Ross government has advanced more than that of any other country he has ever heard of and that there had been a liberal expenditure of public money in the interests of the people if the ministers at Toronto are to be taken as the people. He claimed that there is a public debt in subsidies alone, the surplus of $3,800,000 in hand when the Grits took office had shrunk during the past 31 years to $2,500,000 instead of increasing. He could go further, had he the time to do so, and prove that there is no surplus at all. He claimed that he could point to a misappropriation of public monies to the tune of a million or two and would say that Ross has thrown away millions in pulp concessions alone. Taking exception to the concessions to the Clergue Company, he claimed that 7,400 acres of land had been granted for each mile of railway constructed by the company, who needed the line for their own purposes. The Hon. John Dryden's Act in stocking a ranch in Dakota and shipping therefrom cattle to England will not hold up Ontario, of which Mr. Dryden is minister of Agriculture to the best advantage in the eyes of English men. As to the laws enacted for the benefit of workingmen, Mr. Dennistoun asserted that all the government had done in this direction was to pay a scribe to transform those acts from the British blue books to those of Ontario. In conclusion, he eulogized Mr. Whitney's policy, in which among other things he has promised to wipe out the numbered ballot, and characterized Major Miller as an exceedingly honorable man, and one quite capable of reflecting credit on the West Riding should he be elected. This is a conservative riding and all you conservatives have to do is to say the word and your candidate will be elected.

WHITELAW REID AT THE CORONATION

Judging by his address at a New York dinner the other evening, Mr. Whitelaw Reid goes to represent the American Republic at the Coronation with a proper appreciation of the importance of his mission.

There are not in existence another two first class powers which bear to each other relations even approaching in intimacy those existing between the power Mr. Reid represents and the power to which he is accredited. The best customer of the United States is Britain; the best foreign flag under which she dare trust her investments is the British; the foreign literature she reads, most of it is written by British authors. Then, when the British capitalist goes outside the Empire, his investments are oftener to be found in the United States than elsewhere; and there is no other foreign literature which for a moment rivals the American on British bookshelves.

These and a hundred other similar statements which will suggest themselves to an imaginative reader, are only striking ways of saying that the two powers are of the same race, cherish the same traditions, follow the same ideals and speak the same language.

This is to be seen elsewhere in the world between kindred tribes or small principalities. But the remarkable feature in the case under consideration is that both people are world powers of the first magnitude. As Mr. Reid says, history has never seen before a compact, self-governing, free community, like the American Republic; nor is there any parallel for a world-circling empire of the majesty abroad and the liberty at home possessed by the British. And these two world-beaters are kindred.

We have our family quarrels; we criticise each other with family frankness. But we also have a family similarity in interests abroad and a family understanding of each other's aims. There is no one we quite so like to get ahead of as our "cousin;" and he obviously feels the same way toward us. But Britain never really bristled up until he seemed to threaten the rule of the sea.

Mr. Whitelaw Reid will occupy a position of peculiar prominence at the Coronation.

THE FAVORED COUNTRY

Canadians have much to be thankful for, says the Hamilton Spectator. Here there are no volcanoes to overwhelm the people with storms of hot ashes and lava; no earthquakes to destroy the people by thousands and make heaps of ruins of the buildings; no cyclones to destroy life and property; no hot winds to shrivel up the crops; no blizzards to freeze the unlucky who stray a few yards away from their hearths; no prolonged droughts to kill the cattle by thirst and hunger; no floods to inundate large areas and drown every living thing; no plague of grasshoppers to destroy all vegetation; no violent disturbances of nature of any kind.

Canada has the finest climate in the world, and soil that is unrivalled for the growth of grain, roots and the fruits of the temperate zone.

We have none of the plagues that prevail in the hot countries, none of the political disturbances that keep other parts of the world in a constant condition of blood-letting and unrest, no revolution, no riots.

All is peace and plenty in Canada, and the death rate is the very lowest.

PEACE OR WAR

The London Times is authority for the statement that the Boer peace delegates preserve a truculent demeanor and it is supposed that they will vote for a continuation of hostilities. That may be correct or not, but if it is true that the Boers continue defiant it is to be hoped the war will go on to a finish.

Better men than the Boers have been beaten before and have given in gracefully when the inevitable hour arrived when endurance and bravery could hope to accomplish no more, says the Ottawa Citizen. Much blood and treasure have been wasted on this war and we have entertained the opinion all along that the only terms to be offered should be unconditional surrender. That would leave no doubt in the Boer mind for all time to come as to what the result had been. When those terms have been complied with Great Britain could be as magnanimous to the conquered as she pleased without running the slightest risk of her kindness being misunderstood. Any other sort of terms that are offered in advance are sure to be misinterpreted by the "slim" Boer as a bribe offered him to let up.

If the Boers still feel that they have not had enough fighting care should be taken that they do get enough. "Unconditional surrender is something that even the most ignorant Boer can understand in the way of terms. It necessitates no elaborate negotiations or conferences and leaves no room for swaggering truculence in connection with its acceptance. It was good enough for General Robert E. Lee's army, one of the bravest that ever fought, and it is decidedly good enough for the skulking, treacherous guerrillas who still represent the Boer army in the field, who have no respect for the rules of civilized warfare and who never fail to take advantage of a chivalrous foe's adherence to them.

It were better that the war last another year if necessary, than that the Boer and his admiring, but discreet, foreign sympathizers should be left the slightest ground on which to base the idea that the Boer is putting the British empire under any compliment by consenting to peace.

Slow Shipments

The Winnipeg Free Press of May 15th says: "As a quick transporter of grain the C.N.R. has not found much favor with a certain well known firm of exporters. There may be more firms than this who are kicking, but this particular firm believe they have grounds to make a decided kick. They say wheat which was loaded and shipped on March 1st, just about two months and a half ago, intended for Port Arthur, has not yet been delivered at Port Arthur. This wheat left for its destination on that date, was inspected at Winnipeg some time in April and is now somewhere on the road. Other shipments made in April are also sided somewhere. Others, after being a month on the road, got to Port Arthur, but complain of extreme slowness, and in view of the fact that the C.N.R. announce their readiness and capability to take wheat to Port Arthur believe they should certainly be brought to time.

Baggage Agents Meet

Special to the Times.

Chicago, Ill., May 21.—The American Association of General Baggage Agents began its twenty-second annual convention at the Hotel Virginia today and will continue in session probably throughout the remainder of the week as there is an unusually large number of matters to be considered. Among other things the convention will review the uniform baggage rules adopted in 1898, with a view to harmonizing them with the recent changes made by leading roads.

What Makes the Home?

Not the house, however fine it may be; not its furniture, pictures and appointments. The wife and mother makes the home, and to speak of going home means to go back into the shelter of the mother's love and care.

And when womanly ills sap the mother's strength, the home-life suffers. The food is not cooked as she cooks it. Everywhere the lack of wifely supervision and motherly thoughtfulness is apparent.

What a change, then, when this wife and mother comes back to take her old place in the family. Thousands of women who, because of womanly ills, had been shut out of home life and home happiness, have been enabled to once more take their place in the family after being cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"I commenced taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' about the 10th of last December, one year ago," writes Mrs. Eliza Wright, of Mountainview, Howell Co., Missouri. "I have been very slow about writing to you, although I am thankful I am here to-day and have the privilege of saying I thank you a thousand times for your kind advice. I can truthfully say that it was through your kind advice and your medicine and the will of the Lord that I am living to-day; I am in better health than I have been for three years. I have taken one-half dozen bottles of each medicine. I am able to do my washing for four in family, and all my housework, cooking and milking. In fact, I feel like a new woman."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and its almost countless consequences. They do not react on the system nor beget the pill habit.

ASHBURNHAM NEWS

Latest Events Transpiring in the Village Over the River

—Commodore Calcutt has been prudent in the selection of crews for his steamers this year. The boats are well officered and manned, and are sure to do a big trade.

—The Times has been a trifle late once or twice lately, and the howl that has gone up has reached almost to the heavens. People must have their morning paper or know the reason why.

—The two political candidates have had their say, and it will be for the electors to do the rest. Dr. Ford seems to have the advantage over his opponent in the village and is sure to obtain a good majority.

—We want a new wharf for Ashburnham. Surely it is time that something was done in this connection, for we are literally without any steamboat landing.

—Mr. Harry Nell, Vice President and manager of the Calcutt Brewing Company, says that business in the brewery never was better. There is no more wholesome or popular drink than Calcutt's lager.

—Mr. David Conroy has had a fine bath put in his new residence, the work being under the able direction of Mr. Fred. Boundy, Mr. Adam Hall's chief plumber.

—"My views on bringing up a family—" began a well known resident of Ashburnham, as he was interrupted by his wife: "I'll bring up the family—you go and bring up the coal.

It was an inspiring sight to observe the impartial way in which Mayor John Smith presided over the big political meeting on Monday night. Mayor Smith is a Tory as everybody knows,—but this fact did not prevent his doing his duty on the occasion referred to, and giving the Grit speaker a fair show. John is the man for Galway every time. He will be a parliamentary candidate himself one of these days.

Paine's Celery Compound
Is Daily Saving Precious Lives After Pronounced Failures of Physicians

The months just passed of the present year have brought bereavement and dark clouds of sorrow to many homes in our land. Fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers have been forever removed by the grim reaper death. The large majority of such could have been saved had their friends given them Paine's Celery Compound, instead of the worthless medicines the sick ones were forced to swallow.

In many families a too slavish obedience to medical dictation kept the true life-giver from the sick and dying ones. Past records of marvellous cures and victories wrought by Paine's Celery Compound were ignored by the medical men; in a word, it was unprofessional in their estimation to introduce the life-giving Compound.

Ah! Remorse is now doing its quiet but effective work, and those most closely interested are suffering for their neglect.

Will you, dear reader, allow some dear relative or friend to pass from life without making an effort to save the perishing one by Paine's Celery Compound? The virtues and powers of Dr Phelps' prescription are wondrously far-reaching and mighty. Even though your friends have suffered long and have come to that point where the physician is helpless to save, even then, there is a blessed hope if Paine's Celery Compound is used.

The desperate cases cured in the past and the number of precious lives saved, is the bright, the living proof, that Paine's Celery Compound makes sick people well.

Russell Sage, so often represented in the newspapers as a man who wears a cheap suit, eats apples for lunch, and with no time for anything but the making and amassing of money, has another side to his character. He has been known, more than once, to give to charity; he can appreciate a good joke, and has even been known to make one.

A friend called to see him a few days ago, and in the few minutes he remained incidentally asked the financier his opinion of Cecil Rhodes' will.

Mr. Sage replied that he did not consider Rhodes' idea of the unification of the English-speaking peoples a practical one, and that if any alliance came about between the United States and Great Britain it would not be for sentimental reasons, but rather through commercial and financial interests.

"Then, Mr. Sage," said his questioner, "you think if any closer political relations are established between John Bull's monarchy and Columbia these will be the result of great industrial schemes engineered by such men as J. Pierpont Morgan?"

Scientific Predictions in Fiction.

RECENTLY "Saturday Night" cited a number of cases of remarkable literary prevision of scientific truth. The words in which Calderon, the Spanish dramatist of the seventeenth century, seems to describe wireless telegraphy and the remarkable passage in which Strada, the learned Jesuit historian, writing in 1624, also depicted Marconi's invention, were quoted. But some further cases of the same kind are now brought to light.

In the third part of "Gulliver's Travels," Swift describes the two satellites of Mars. As the London "Spectator" points out, "when Swift wrote, astronomy had not advanced greatly beyond Huygens's contentment with the twelve bodies—six planets and six satellites—which made up the 'perfect number' of the solar system. Certainly no one suspected that Mars had moons of its own. Thus Swift made a very wild guess when he announced of the Laputan philosophers: 'They have likewise discovered two lesser stars or satellites, which revolve about Mars, whereof the innermost is distant from the center of the primary planet exactly three of his diameters, and the outermost five; the former revolves in the space of ten hours, and the latter in twenty-one and a half.' Not only were there no grounds for the prediction of two satellites, but such an estimate of their distance from the planet was unprecedented; it was as if our moon should be within twenty thousand miles of the earth, and rise and set twice or thrice in the twenty-four hours. Nothing could be more improbable. Yet in 1877 Professor Asaph Hall, with the great Washington equatorial, actually discovered two tiny satellites of Mars, whose distances from the planet are 1 1-2 and 3 1-2 diameters, whilst their periods are 7 1-2 and 30 hours respectively. The agreement with Swift's guess is in the main so remarkable that it is hardly possible to ascribe it to mere accident; and yet these satellites are the merest points of light, which no telescope in existence before Herschel's day could possibly have shown."

Many other similar anticipations are chronicled in the Philadelphia "Era." We quote as follows:

"The law of gravitation was announced by Newton in the year 1685. Had it not been foreseen by Shakespeare in 1609? At all events, in 'Troilus and Cressida,' he put these lines into the mouth of Cressida:

> But the strong base and building of my > love
> Is as the very center of the earth,
> Drawing all things to it.—Act iv. sc. 2.

"A contemporary of Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, anticipated the modern air-cushion. In 'The Alchemist,' he makes Sir Epicure Mammon, in enumerating the pleasures to be his when in possession of the philosopher's stone, declare that

> I will have my beds blown, not stuffed;
> Down is too hard.

"In another play the same author credits the Dutch with an invention that foreshadows the Holland submarine boat:

> It is an automa, runs under water,
> With a snug nose, and has a nimble > tail
> Made like an auger, with which tail
> she wriggles
> Between the coats of a ship, and sinks
> it straight.

"In France, Cyrano de Bergerac showed himself full of scientific prescience. The airship in which the hero of his 'Voyage to the Moon' (1650) made his trip to that sphere was a pretty close foreshadowing of Montgolfier's balloon, as will be seen from our illustration, made for an edition that long antedated the aeronaut.

"In the same book he clearly foreshadowed the phonograph.

'The supernatural being who acted as the hero's guide gave him for his entertainment some of the books made by the inhabitants of the moon. They were enclosed in boxes. This is what he saw and heard:

" 'On opening the box I found inside a concern of metal, something like one of our watches, full of curious little springs and minute machinery. It was really a book, but a wonderful book that has no leaves or letters; a book, for the understanding of which the eyes are of no use—only the ears are necessary. When anyone wishes to read, he winds up the machine with its great number of nerves of all kinds, and turns the pointer to the chapter he wishes to hear, when there comes out, as if from the mouth of a man or of an instrument of music, the distinct and various sounds which serve the Great Lunarians as the expression of language.' . . .

"Among Fenelon's Fables, written in 1690 for the instruction of Louis XIV.'s grandson, is one entitled 'Voyage Supposé,' and among the supposititious marvels of which it is compact we read: 'There was no painter in all the country, but when they wished the portrait of a friend, or a picture representing some lovely landscape or other object, they put water into large basins of gold and silver, and made this water face the object they wished to paint. Very soon the water would congeal and become as the face of a mirror, where the image dwelt ineffaceably. This could be carried wherever one pleased, and gave as faithful a picture as any mirror.' "

"Is not this an anticipation of photography?"

Great men of the imaginative temperament, observes the "Era," build better than they know; and "the world looks back and sees what they were striving for, what they were aiming at, though they themselves knew it not, or only dimly recognised it."

Changed His Mind.

A young officer at San Francisco had been ordered to the Philippines. According to a Western paper, he received the following telegram from the War Department at Washington:

"You can go to New York, and sail on transport that goes by Suez."

The officer replied: "Would prefer to cross Pacific direct."

Then the Department telegraphed him again: "Transport will make good time; has sixty women school teachers on board."

Rhodes as a Phrase-Maker.

Rhodes rather fancied himself as a phrase-maker, says a correspondent of The New York Sun. A writer who saw a good deal of him, describes him as repeating over and over again some saying of his own with which he seemed to have been pleased as soon as he had uttered it.

Perhaps one of the best-known phrases is the "unctuous rectitude" with which he reproved a certain class of his opponents in this country. No one in future who wishes to discuss the traits of the British character will be able to do without those two words. Some other sayings of Rhodes which have been left on record are as follows:—

My life is a temporary one, but the country will remain after me.

If I forfeit my flag, what have I left? If you take away my flag you take away everything.

Remember that sentiment rules half the world.

"It is no use for us to have big ideas if we have not got the money to carry them out," Rhodes once remarked to Gen. Gordon.

It took me fifteen years to get a mine, but I got it. Though my boat may be slow in the race, I know exactly what I am starting for.

I have found out one thing, and that is, if you have an idea, and it is a good idea, if you will only stick to it you will come out all right.

The only awkward thing is the progress of Time. We do get older, and become a little hurried in our ideas because of that terrible Time.

After the raid: "Kruger and I have met twice. The first trick I won (referring to Bechuanaland), he won the second. There is no doubt who will win the odd!"

When timorous friends were begging him to be discreet, and foes were saying he dare not "face the music," he answered both, once and for all: "I am not going to lie about it!"

When Dr. Jameson was convicted and sentenced for the part he took in the raid, Mr. Rhodes exclaimed: "What a tribute to the moral worth of the nation that has jumped the world!"

I will challenge any man or woman, however broad their ideas may be, who objects to go to church or chapel to say they would not sometimes be better for an hour or an hour and a half in a church.

In the Oriel Hall, Oxford, in 1899, he said: "I have been interested in Aristotle's definition of virtue in the 'Ethics' as the 'highest activity of the soul living for the highest object in a perfect life.' That has always seemed to me the noblest rule for a man to follow, and I have made it my rule from the first."

"Life is too short, after all," he used to say, "to worry about previous lives. From the cradle to the grave—what is it? Three days at the seaside. Just that and nothing more. But although it is only three days, we must be doing something. I cannot spend my time throwing stones into the water. But what is worth while doing?"

A Waggon Journey.

After so much about Rhodes one may have a bit of South African life. It is a description of a waggon journey a score of years ago, and occurs in a new novel, entitled "Reversed on Appeal," by John Ross:—

"Pale pink over the trees, and bars gold glittering through the branches saw the large waggon equipped and drawn with open front, facing the kraal gate, towards which extended a double line of shining brown oxen, each with a white streak down its back like fourteen brethren bearing up the flashing chain, crossed at each pair by a heavy pole with wooden yokes for two. At the head of the uneven line of glancing horns and switching tails stood the powerful bronze figure, thong in hand, of a Zulu in a sleeveless blouse and short blue pants, the leader of the horned cavalcade. A Kaffir boy held a grey horse ready saddled, tossing his head and rattling his bit with impatience, a contrast to the drowsy cattle. . . . There was a din of shrill Kaffir shouts, weeping women, yelping dogs, stamping feet and rattling chains as Mouji flourished his long whip, and the Zulu dragged at the leading strap like a son of Anak, as he guided the string of cattle out of the kraal into the open field.

"Her uncle rode his grey horse within speaking distance behind the waggon, and when they passed the large green orchard, with its brown pears, purple plums, and yellow oranges ripening in the branches, he rode in among the trees and returned with a small basket of peaches, which he handed to Belle at the end of the waggon, as they moved slowly on through prickly cactus hedges, and bushes of red and yellow mimosa blossom. . . .

"She had travelled in the waggon before, with the mid-curtain that was lowered at night, to shut her off into a little nunnery of her own. She knew the bed, so innocently tied on one side, in which she was advised to slumber, and supposed to sleep, during the ceaseless jolts of a moonlight journey. And she remembered how she pitied all men, and women, too, who went down to the sea in ships, if their berths were like her berth, and their tossings like her tossings. She knew the boxes tied with thongs that served for seats and lockers, and that she must fasten up everything, if she did not wish a bruised foot or a wounded head, when the quick mounts and sudden dips came under the irresistible strain of fourteen oxen."

It is estimated that the Kaffirs in the diamond mines at Kimberley, South Africa, steal £250,000 worth of diamonds in a year.

The Lion Bridge, near Sangang, in China, is the longest in the world, being 5½ miles from end to end. The roadway is 70 feet above water.

A large house in a Berlin suburb has been rented by several acquaintances, married and single, who are going to try to run the place on the principles of communal life.

"Take the men of prominence in the United States to-day, and pick out the true gentlemen. I'll wager that nine out of ten of them never had a high school education, let alone a college one." So says Mark Twain.

Gold has been mined in Georgia for nearly three-quarters of a century. Previous to the discovery of gold in California the mines of Georgia furnished the greater part of the gold produced in the United States.

The Poultry Yard.

An English poultry expert says:—Both in the States and in France the system of feeding poultry generally followed is the exact opposite to our own, the fowls getting soft food at night and corn in the morning. The poultry-keeper may well ask which is right, and the answer apparently is that there is very little difference in the result. An experiment recently tried in America, two lots of fowls getting just the same treatment, but one having soft food in the morning and corn at night, and the other the opposite, resulted in the fowls getting soft food in the morning laying slightly better than the others in winter. This is what one might expect. To set against this, however, was the fact that the fowls getting soft food at night voided double the amount of manure. The reason of this, of course, is that soft food is more quickly digested, but in those poultry houses where the droppings from the fowl-houses are systematically collected and utilized, there is a distinct value in feeding soft food at night, in preference to the morning. There is far less trouble to the feeder when corn is given in the morning, and it really seems as though the value of soft food for breakfast has been over-estimated.

Sulphur for Fowls and Swine.

When fowls are attacked with cholera I find that a little sulphur given in the food will check it. One tablespoonful mixed with the morning's food for thirty fowls and given once a month is sufficient when they are in health. When much sulphur is fed, with exposure to a cold and damp atmosphere, it will cause stiffness in the joints. Sulphur put in the dust bath with ashes is a preventive against lice. A little sprinkled in the nests and under setting hens routs these pests.

It is also good to give swine in case of cholera or sickness followed with vomiting caused from overfeeding. It regulates the stomach and liver without further trouble. I have given two teaspoonfuls twice a day in severe cases in sweet milk or sprinkled on some sliced vegetables.—Emma L. Hill, Damascus, N.Y.

To Make Hens Lay.

Many people complain that they cannot get their hens to lay in winter. One very strong complaint comes to us from one of our subscribers. To aid such we give the experience of one who resides in the cold climate of South Dakota.

Many farmers fail to get any eggs during the winter months, and, from the experience of others more successful, it must be concluded that they either do not care about winter eggs, or that they neglect to so manage and feeds the fowls as to induce them to lay. An interesting experiment was made with two lots of pullets, showing influence of feed and care on the production of eggs in winter, by Ross Seelye-Miller, in the cold climate of South Dakota. The trial was reported in a western journal as follows:—

Two pens of pullets were placed in conditions as nearly equal as possible. One pen was designed for breeding, and it was desired that they should not lay until toward spring. The other pen, containing 18 hens, was designed to produce eggs during the winter, and the eggs were not intended at all for hatching.

The experiment began in December. Let it be remembered that the care, temperature and all other things were equal, save the food, and that the pen designed for late laying contained two less fowls.

During December the early layers produced five and a quarter dozen eggs, and the other pen not an egg. In January, the early layers produced ten dozen and three eggs; the late layers seven eggs. In February the early layers produced nine dozen eggs, and the other pen one dozen. In March the early layers produced fifteen dozen eggs, and the late layers three and a half dozen. In April came the change; the early layers laid ten dozen and nine eggs, and the late layers fifteen dozen and four eggs. From this time the breeders were kept laying, and produced in May 28 eggs, the early layers 142 eggs. This shows conclusively that egg-producing may be governed in a great measure. The feeding was very simple, and the early-laying fowls were fed as follows:—In the morning, boiled lean meat, chopped, with scraps from the table, and during the day all the wheat screenings they would eat, with corn twice a week. They were, of course, watered twice daily, and had some milk to drink.

The pen not intended for laying were fed on poor wheat screenings, with corn. These fowls grew and waxed fat, until they seemed too fat, and no doubt were, for laying. As spring came on the food was changed, and as it was the natural time for laying, too, they produced eggs in abundance.

The ordinary poultry raiser feeds too much corn and wheat. Hens are fed liberally twice a day and are fed on a steady diet of one or two things, either corn or wheat, and both fattening. Hence our hens do not pay, and poultry raising is a snare and a delusion to the one who is not wideawake and up to date in caring for the fowls.

Meat is known to be a great egg-producer, and there is now upon the market a feed prepared from refuse which makes an ideal food for fowls. Bones ground and plenty of milk are also very good in egg production.

Cleanliness and warmth are absolutely essential. A hen with a frozen comb might about as well be killed, unless she is a valuable one, whose eggs will make good hatching in the spring.

We feed our cattle for beef, and our hogs for lean or fat; we feed cows for milk or butter. Then why not discriminate in feeding our poultry too?

If thought were used more we should find our purses growing fat. Lean hens and hogs may be desirable, but a fat pocketbook never fails of appreciation, and the need of strenuous labor is decreasing.—The Country Gentleman.

A Fighting Schoolmaster.

The experience of a college graduate, named Levenworth, who taught for a year in a little Western town, is an example of the way in which a teacher sometimes wins the admiration of his pupils quite unexpectedly.

Levenworth was not a teacher by nature or profession; but, as many men have done, he spent a year teaching to get money enough to help himself through the law school. He was a hearty, clear-minded fellow, who kept rather aloof from the townspeople. The local paper spoke of him as having "had a promising career in college."

Part of this promising career had, as it happened, been spent in athletics. He had learned to box and wrestle, and had won his class championship in the art which, from its unfortunate association with the prize-ring, has not so good a reputation among the peaceful as, in its legitimate form, it deserves.

His school was quiet and orderly from the start, but he found it hard work to get on intimate terms with the twenty boys under him. They obeyed at a distance, but did not show much personal friendship for him.

One day at recess, when the schoolyard was a clamor of voices, the young master heard a sudden lull. Looking out the window, he saw the children lined up against the fence watching a teamster, who was stupidly trying to whip his horse up the hill that ran past the school. The wagon was loaded heavily with garden-stuff, and the horse was doing his best to no purpose.

Suddenly one of the boys went into the street, and evidently remonstrated with the driver. For answer he got an ugly slash of the whip, and reeled back, holding his hands over his eyes.

This was too much for Levenworth. He ran downstairs and out across the playground. Coolly pushing a stone under the wheel with his foot, he commanded the teamster, a gaunt, sinewy man, to come off his seat.

The fellow grew hostile at once, and obeyed. Jumping down, he approached the schoolmaster, ready and eager for a fight, and heated to dangerous anger by his struggle with the horse.

It was a real, old-fashioned fight, with the power of anger and excitement on one side, and skill, backed by those almost infallible allies, right and justice, on the other.

There was enough left of the teamster to drive his horse, while a dozen boys put their shoulders to the wheels and pushed the wagon to the top of the hill.

The pupil whose task it was to ring the bell for the end of recess was a minute late that day. The teacher was late, too. It took him a little time to put his clothes in order and wash his face and hands. Meanwhile the school assembled, not without some noise and excitement, and took their seats. They were subdued and orderly when Levenworth came in and walked to his desk.

Before he had time to be seated, and as if by a preconcerted signal, the pupils began to applaud. Discipline and modesty made the teacher try to stop them. It was useless, so he smiled. Then they cheered. The disorder of the next minute was quite against the rules, but nobody received a black mark on the schoolmaster's deportment book; and after that, to Levenworth's surprise, there was a new and warm friendship in the bearing of the boys toward him.

Not Guilty.

"Who made the world?" snapped out a rather testy inspector years ago to a class of very small boys. No answer. Several times he repeated the question, getting louder and more incensed each time. At last a poor little fellow, kneading his eyes vigorously with his knuckles, blubbered out, "Please, sir, it wasn't me."

Why Linn Quit the Newspaper.

James Weber Linn, whose novel, "The Second Generation," a story of newspaper life and political corruption in Chicago, has brought him into the public eye, is a nephew of Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago.

How this young author came to quit newspaper work is an interesting story. He secured a position on the staff of a Chicago daily immediately on leaving college. All went well until one night, about three months after he took up the life of a reporter, when the city editor assigned him to make a midnight call at a home where the head of the household, a prominent man, had committed suicide. "Get a good talk out of the wife and the girl," were the parting instructions. As Linn approached the house he was overcome by a sense of the intrusiveness of his mission. Suddenly the glamor and charm of newspaper work vanished. In vain he attempted to force himself to go up the steps of the house. The traditional incentive of the newspaper office, the argument that he must not "fall down" on his assignment, failed to stimulate his interest or his courage, and the longer he stood staring at the black streamer of crape that fluttered from the door the greater became his repugnance for his disagreeable task. Finally he turned on his heel, took a car back to the office, and handed in his resignation with the explanation that some other man would have to get that interview. This episode ended his newspaper experience and he soon secured a position as an instructor in rhetoric in the University of Chicago, where he is still engaged.

Mr. Linn's book was written in six weeks, while spending a vacation in Europe. His success affords another example of the fact that much of the literature of the day is being made by the young, for he is only twenty-five years of age.

For the Farmer.

For the destruction of fungus growth use the fungicides, such as Bordeaux mixture. For sucking insects use the kerosene emulsion. For biting insects use Paris green.

The Globe has been favored by Secretary F. D. Coburn with the last quarter's report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture. It contains about 400 pages of interesting information about the production, marketing and milling of wheat in Kansas.

Meat is dear, says The Chicago Live Stock World, not so much because of a shortage in supply as on account of a phenomenal demand. The whole country is prosperous, and is consuming meat in unusual quantities. Chicago has received this year about 4,700 cars of live stock more than in the same period of 1901.

The report of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station for 1901 on food products is just to hand, and contains a good deal of useful as well as much disquieting information. The station ordered visits to forty-three towns and villages and has purchased samples of food products from each. The results showed that the custom of adulterating with chemical preservatives and chemical dyes is more prevalent than is generally imagined. Of 246 samples of milk bought, twenty-one were adulterated with chemical preservatives. Of 116 samples of tomato catsup, sauce, etc., 96 were adulterated with dyes of coal tar origin, and of 66 samples of jams and jellies, 21 were adulterated in a similar manner. Many of these dyes are most injurious to health. The chemicals commonly employed as preservatives were salicylic acid, salicylate of soda, benzoic acid, and benzoate of soda, all of which are hurtful. Several of the firms mentioned as having employed adulterants of the kind do business in Canada. The public will do well to avoid highly colored tomato catsup, and chili sauce, and to buy no jams and jellies that are not manufactured by reputable firms.

Raising Good Cows.

I like to fuss with calves. I like the calves because I like good cows and realize the fact that the foundation of a good cow is a good calf. Sometimes I come across a good cow that can be bought at a reasonable price, but the surest way to get a good cow is to raise her from a calf of known parentage. There are people who yet believe they can feed butter fat into milk. My experience, however, is that when you have a cow that gives blue milk, blue milk she will make, even on the richest kind of food, and when it is given to her in fullest supply. And when you have a cow that gives rich, creamy milk that butter-makers and milk-consumers like, rich milk she will give, even if she has nothing but cornstalks or poor hay to eat. Feed determines the quantity of milk, while the blood of the animal determines the milk's richness. For that reason it does not pay to bother with calves of blue milk stock (unless for selling milk, and hardly then). Nor does it pay to fuss with a calf that for any reason is lacking in individual vigor.

But any vigorous heifer calf of good stock is too good for the butcher when it is so easy to make a good cow out of it in not more than two years' time. The Guernseys and Jerseys have the reputation of giving the richest milk. But there is yet a great difference in this respect in individual cows, or, perhaps, rather, in cow families. Just at present I am raising a calf from a Jersey dam, whose milk contains more butter fat than I have ever seen in milk before. Not having much milk on which to bring this calf up, I have tried milk substitutes, especially clear flaxseed meal and a calf meal. I began giving flaxseed meal on the third day by the teaspoonful, gradually increasing to two handfuls at a feed in the fifth or sixth week. The meal was put into a pail, and boiling water put on it, making a thin soup, which was mixed with what skim milk I could spare for the purpose and fed blood warm. At six weeks of age the calf meal—which seems to consist mostly of flaxseed meal or oil meal—was substituted for the flaxseed meal, two good handfuls at a feed. This calf also receives dry bran and other ground grains, and eats several handfuls out of its pail, some cut clover hay, etc., and has done so well that I believe it possible to bring up good calves practically without milk, except for a short time on the start.—T. Greener, in Farm and Fireside.

Orchard and Garden.

At the Nova Scotia Fruit Growers' meeting Prof. L. H. Bailey of Cornell University said that the fifteen years last past were marked by three distinct improvements in the methods of caring for orchards. The first was the introduction of spraying, which had now become so universal a practice that it was not thought necessary to advocate it at the meetings. The second was the tillage of orchards, and that was so well settled now that the farmers do not ask, "Shall we cultivate?" but "What are the best methods for clay or sandy soil?" whichever the orchard was on. Now the prime question seems to be upon the use of a cover crop for the orchard, and he believed that within five years they would be discussing the merits of special cover crops for special soils. Where the soil is not in condition to grow better crops he would use rye as a starter, and gradually work the soil up until it was rich enough to grow crimson clover, which he thought the best cover crop.

But it is quite possible to get the soil too rich with peas and clover if plowed under each spring, and thus it would be well to change occasionally to buckwheat or rye. He would plow them with gang plow, and cover only three or four inches deep. This he would do early in the spring, that they might decay. Would not use commercial fertilizers, or but a little, until the trees came into bearing. After the first four years the orchard should not need plowing, but the disc or cut-away harrows should be sufficient for cultivation. He urged setting two-year-old trees, and said that when two-year-old and six-year-old trees were set at the same time they were of equal size after five years. He is setting in his own orchard the Northern Spy, and top-grafting them with scions from bearing trees that produce fruit of known excellence, as he believes in the individuality of trees.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Pleasant Cure For Weak Lungs

The best remedy for sore, weak lungs, is the soothing vapor of Catarrhozone, which traverses every air cell and passage of the breathing organs. It treats remote parts that cough mixtures and sprays can't approach, and kills thousands of germs at every breath. Catarrhozone drives away pain, congestion and inflammation; it makes breathing easy and regular, and exerts a marvellous influence on coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, catarrh, deafness and lung trouble. Catarrhozone cures at once, is delightful to inhale, and simple to use. Price $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Items of Interest

Ottawa, May 20.—Dr. David H. Baird, dentist, who went from Ottawa as a corporal with the 10th field hospital under command of Col. Worthington, has written home to Dr. Gorrell describing his experiences. Dr. Baird was very ill on the way over with appendicitis, but as soon as he struck the South African climate he began to recuperate and to-day he is as good as ever. He says that the Canadian field hospital is far superior to any of the imperial outfits and are somewhat envied by the imperial officers.

While he was at Klerksdorp the hospital had a trying experience in that they were so beset upon by the enemy that they were compelled to dig trenches for the protection of the sick. On that day everybody dug, officers and all, and they worked like trojans. While they were digging these trenches the bullets were singing about their heads with an occasional volley of pom-poms thrown in to make it still more interesting. The Red Cross flag, he says, did not cut any figure. He says it is great sport to see the pom-pom in action, and is very demoralizing on the men who take any if the fire when it starts. Being a dentist Dr. Baird's services as a dentist are in great demand. He has extracted about 250 teeth, and says he could easily make $20 a day if he wished to charge for the work.

Since landing in the country the hospital has trekked all over the place and while working hard had a great deal of experience, besides seeing the country to good advantage. He says in closing that the Canadian field hospital is easily the best on the field and has been constantly engaged since they arrived in the country. He also states that letters from home are very much appreciated by the boys at the front.

A Wonderful Tonic and Strengthener

Said a druggist to-day, "No doubt about it, the tonic that gives best results is the biggest seller, and that is Ferrozone. It enriches and purifies the blood, restores strength and energy to the feeble, and is a scientific reconstructor that was always popular. In chlorosis, anaemia, tiredness, languor, brain fag, indigestion and dyspepsia its action is prompt. Yes, I recommend Ferrozone to my customers because I believe it is the best. Boxes cost 50c. Maj. Miller's Meeting was the second speaker, and in an eloquent and lengthy speech censured the educational policy of the government, and denied that the territory in dispute between the Dominion and Ontario governments was not that recently developed around Sault Ste Marie. He claimed that the Provincial secretary's nerves were becoming considerably shattered by Miller, the shoemaker's constant pegging away at him. He also contradicted the statement in the Examiner that Mr. B. Clegg was receiving but $800 a year and asserted that the Hon. Israel Tarte had replied to him that Mr. Clegg is employed both by the Department of Railways and Canals and that of Public Works, from each of which he is in receipt of $800 a year. These amounts, added to $300 credited to Mr. Clegg in the Public Accounts, for forest ranging gives him a salary of $1900 a year. He accepted the statement of the Examiner that Clegg only receives $800 a year, but would like to know who gets the other $1100. He went into the financial condition of the Province and claimed that there is a debt of nearly $60,000,000. There is no stability about the Referendum, he said, and even should it be carried it can be repealed in the first session of the House, as it does not necessitate both parties interested voting on it. He deplored that the country has not in previous years sent to Parliament more men of independent views and with the courage of their convictions such men for instant as Major Miller and Dr. Ford, who would force upon their leaders an honest and upright administration of the Province's affairs. He produced samples of Canadian and Irish school books for comparison, and claimed that we have been and are paying three times as much for our text books for the past sixteen years than is paid for equally as good books in Ireland. He denounced the whole educational system as leaning to the professions to the advantage of the mass of the people. Even in Peterborough should children pass their entrance examination at 10, 11 or 12 years of age, and cannot afford to pay for their text books they are shut out of the High School. This he said, is not just; such children should get a year or two's education in the High School free. Mr. Garvin concluded his remarks with the old cry of "Its time for a change."

THE CANDIDATE.

Major Miller received quite an ovation and made an exceedingly creditable speech. He thought that at the incipiency of the campaign he had been despised as a working man with considerable impudence to come out against a gentleman, and that he could be handled by local stumpers. However, as the campaign developed the gentleman had found it necessary to stay at home himself and to bring in his heavy artillery and flood the country with honorables. And for the first time in the history of this riding the honorables are taken out to country school houses to fight this beggar of a shoemaker. He stated that paid canvassers, also can be seen, like ghouls in the darkness of night shooting out in every direction in the interests of his opponent. He credited Sir John Macdonald with being the first advocate of agricultural schools and ridiculed the proposition of one of the Liberal great guns to establish one in Harvey. He scored the government for its appropriation to the Stony Creek dam, which don't conserve a bucketful of water in the summer time; it is only a spring freshet conserved for the use of a lumbering company. The same applies to the Bottle Creek dam. As to the boasted colonization appropriations, he found in Colonization Board report John Aikens credited with $300 for such purposes. The truth of the matter is, he said, Jim Aikens spent that money on a road leading over private property to Gull Lake. He claimed that there were instances of overseers getting $2 and $2.50 a day for work they never saw. The major next went at length into the government's pulp concessions which he said would have brought into the treasury half a million dollars had they been put up at auction as they should have been. After a lengthy criticism of the educational and ballot systems at present in use, the Major went on to definitely state his own principles. I am, he said out and out conservative and a temperance man. Before I accepted the nomination I demanded the privilege of supporting any temperance measure introduced in the House, whether by Grit or Tory. I oppose the Referendum because I don't believe it is an honest measure, and was never meant to be one. You asked for bread and they gave you a stone. Ross gave the temperance people a Referendum to wrestle with for a time, and told the liquor men to go on selling while he picks the till. As to Mr. Stratton personally he had nothing to say against him, but he characterized Ross and Stratton as a dashed bad pair. In conclusion, he denied the statement that that he had joined a union just before an election. Fifteen years ago he was a member of the Knights of labor, and when he joined the Federal Union there was no thought of his being the Conservative Nominee. He thought the interests of the country stood before party or politics, and that we have arrived at a time when prejudices should be set aside in favor of a government we can be proud of, let it be Grit or Tory. The Major concluded an eloquent and lengthy speech amid prolonged applause.

Three cheers were given for Whitney, Miller and the King.

WEATHER AND FOOD

As the hot weather comes on we lighten our raiment with due care for the comfort of the body. In like manner should young and old arrange a system of diet for the summer months—a diet that will maintain a normal appetite and at the same time nourish the body, nerves and blood.

In hot weather the breakfast should be light, refreshing and nourishing. If you desire a supply of energy, nerve and brain power, use Malt Breakfast Food; make it your regular morning dish. Do not forget the children; let them have their dish of Malt Breakfast Food as well as the older people; they need all the energy, strength and health they can acquire.

As a summer food, Malt Breakfast Food holds first place in the estimation of our medical men. It does not heat the blood; it is easily digested and assimilated; it comforts the stomach; its concentrated nourishment builds up the body and enriches the blood. Besides energizing and invigorating every function of the system, Malt Breakfast Food conduces to sweet and refreshing sleep. It stands unequalled as a health food. At all grocers.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

"Do You Know Him, or Do You Not?"

Acting upon the impulse of the moment, Hetty turned back toward the house.

Daisy started up from her chair with a cry of terror as she unceremoniously opened the door.

Ah, what horrible torture to live in constant fear of a step— of a voice!

Hetty had told her how heaven had intervened to save her from the crime of suicide, and had pleaded with her for hours to tell her why she did it.

"You have some terrible secret that is eating your heart out, Daisy. Oh, let me share it with you, dear!" she sobbed, but Daisy turned away with a horrible shudder.

"You would hate me, Hetty," she wailed bitterly. "No, no, you must never know until— until— I am past all reproving!"

"Is it something you have done, dear, that the world might not quite approve of?" asked Hetty, clasping closely the little death- cold hands and looking down into the frightened pansy- blue eyes raised in such terror to hers.

"I cannot tell you," answered Daisy, despairingly, her voice sinking to a pitiful whisper. "Do not ask me, Hetty.

"You can do me one great favor, Hetty, and let no one know," she nervously added. "Find out if any one came last night, or— or, this morning and inquired for me."

Hetty went quickly and made rigid inquiries among the servants.

The answer was "No," and that was the answer she brought back to Daisy, who was crouching back in her chair, the very picture of abject fear.

She had not thought to inquire if a stranger had called for Aleck or her father.

The answer Hetty brought back seemed to give her new life; the color drifted back to her white cheeks in a crimson wave.

"Ah, if I dared believe it was but an idle threat!" she cried below her breath. "Harold St. John has not come. If that be true he dare not."

"I want you to come out into the garden with me, dear," said Hetty. "Now that I have promised to keep last night's terrible escapade from papa and Olive, you must, in turn, pay some little heed to my entreaties, and I do entreat that you will come out into the garden.

"See how the butterflies are coquetting with the roses over there by the miniature lake, and the sun is drifting down on the lilacs. Come out with me, dear, and enjoy it; papa is waiting for me in the garden; he has sent for me, so I must hurry away. Come, where is your garden-hat?"

"I do not need one," answered Daisy. "Go to papa if he wants you. I will come to you down in the rose-garden a little later on."

Hetty always liked to remember how she suddenly bent down and kissed the lovely young face before she turned away.

"My foe did not come; death did not come to me," Daisy whispered to herself, in an awe- stricken voice; then she looked out of the window down the gravel walk that led to the gate.

Ah! it was a rare blessing to see the world bathed in a flood of golden sunshine again.

How glad she was that she was not lying cold and stiff in death on her white bed that morning.

No one but Hetty knew how near she had been to death. But it would be death for her sooner or later; for, though Harold St. John should keep silent, she could not stand such torture as this long; better death than that she should go mad, for it would end that way.

That was Harold St. John's aim and object— to drive her mad; that was the vengeance he meant to take on her.

Drying her eyes, she stepped slowly out on the balcony and down the spiral stairway that led into the garden. Yes, it was a glorious morning, as Hetty had said— she would go out into the sunshine and thank heaven she still lived.

Suddenly she imagined she heard the sound of a shrill, piercing cry.

"It is only my fancy," murmured Daisy nervously, "or perhaps some bird's shrill note— the old woods back of the villa are full of caws — they should be driven away from the trees."

The sound was not repeated, and she walked on through the sunshine toward the garden hedged in by the tall flowering lilacs that lay beyond.

She was quite sure she heard her father's voice in the distance, but she paid no heed.

As she passed the fountain she paused for a moment, looking down in its glassy depths, for its waters lay still now under the soft, bright light of the sun, and she saw her own face mirrored there.

She was not vain, but she could not help but notice the exquisite beauty of that face, framed in its sheen of golden hair. It was beauty such as was given to few women, but it had been a bitter curse to her, for it had lured Harold St. John into fancying her.

She knew her first great grave fault had been in keeping her acquaintance with him and the evident admiration he professed for her, a secret from her honest old father.

He would have forbidden those clandestine meetings — have forbidden him ever to look upon her face again.

There would have been a few tears perhaps, a little heartache, then it would have been all over; he would have gone away— and, girl- fashion, she would have forgotten him; but now— ah! how much sorrow had accrued from her folly!

She had done all that to spite Hetty and Olive because they would not take her to the garden- party at Briarvale, and now, what would she not give to recall those few fleeting hours!

She would never have trusted a handsome, bold, soft- spoken stranger; but then young girls do not know the rocks that lie in the sea of life— they find out by bitter experience.

Her reverie was interrupted by another pitiful cry.

"That surely is no fancy," muttered Daisy. "That is Hetty's voice. Now why should she cry out so strangely!" Daisy wondered — and

Testing It For Herself.

He watched her arranging the violets in the big Kakiri bowl.

She looked so very pretty, and yet she must be told.

Lighting a cigarette, he braced himself for the telling. As he tossed the match in the direction of the blazing fire, she came toward him, holding in her hand a few of the purple flowers.

"For you," she said, simply, and pressed close to his side as she put them in his buttonhole.

After that she bent and kissed him, slowly and deliberately. He sat transfixed. In all their platonics her lips had never before touched his.

Ere he could recover himself she kissed him again.

Then she walked over by the fire. He looked anxiously after her.

She faced about, and he saw that her lips were moving slightly, while her eyes had a far-off gaze.

At last she spoke.

"You can marry her!"

There was a pause—she seemed to be indulging in further meditation — and then—

"Yes, you can marry her. I don't care at all. You see, I kissed you on purpose. I did it twice to make sure, and I didn't feel even the faintest quiver either time. I was very careful, and tasted each kiss thoroughly, and I know now that—that you can marry her."

He rose, his form and his rage towering together. What man could be calm on learning that his lips possess no power to thrill?

"Good-bye," he said, putting out his hand.

"Good-bye," she answered, smiling.

He went out, and the door closed behind him.

She stood where he left her, banding her clasped fingers across her eyes. The sunlight streamed in between the window arches and shot a ray of glory over the violets, the woman and the woman's yellow hair. It caused the diamonds on her hand to sparkle brilliantly, and something on her cheek shone too.

"Dear heaven!" she murmured, softly, "what must it be to have him do the kissing!"

Literary Success.

"The main element of literary success is the popular mood," remarks "Life." "Litterateurs and litteratouses have nothing to do with making the popular mood. This is made by the high price of potatoes, or the bad times abroad, or the constructive statesmanship of the Republican party, et cetera. The public take to their bosoms today what they would have coldly neglected yesterday, and vice versa. Even the works of an Irving Bacheller might have fallen still-born from the press in another generation. In a word, literary success is quite like success in the real estate or saloon business; it is lucrative, and that is all. The man or woman who should write to please himself or herself— But that is getting away from our subject."

Maid of All Work.

In Mr. Dooley's new volume, "Mr. Dooley's Opinions," there is an entertaining chapter on "The Poet's Fate." Practically it is an essay about Mr. Kipling, and Mr. Dooley blossoms forth this time as Mr. Kipling's admirer:

"Roodyard Kipling is a diff'rint kind iv a pote. He don't keep pothry f'r style so that he can turn out behind it an' say, 'Boys, what d'ye think iv that f'r high-stheppin' verse?' Comfort an' not display is his motto. Whin he asks what Hogan calls th' Muse f'r to come up an' spind a week with him, he doesn't expict her to set all day in th' hammock on th' front stoop singin' about th' bur-rds. She's got to do th' week's washin', clane th' windows, cook th' meals, chune th' pianny, dust th' furniture, mend th' socks, an' milk th' cow be day, an' be night she's got to set up an' balance th' books iv an empire. Whin this Muse has thrown up her job at Kipling's, she'll be as good a second girl as anny pote wud want to hire. So Roodyard Kipling's pomes is in gr-reat demand. They're warranted not to tear or shrink or r-run in th' wash, an' guaranteed to fit all sizes an' ages."

Mr. D. Speptic—My dear, I wish you would prepare something occasionally to tempt my appetite. His Wife—The idea! Why, you have not any appetite to tempt.—"Waverley Magazine."

An amusing practical joke has been perpetrated in a continental club. A member hurt his finger, and not wishing to consult his own doctor he asked a brother member, who was a physician, to look at it. The physician did so, and, to the patient's surprise, sent in a bill for ten shillings. The victim showed the bill to another member, who was a solicitor, and asked him what he should do. The solicitor promptly advised him to pay the bill, and sent him in another for ten shillings for advice given. The man complained of his treatment to yet another member, who reported him to the committee for failing to meet his obligations. He was ultimately fined a case of champagne.—London Globe

Mrs. Smith—I reckon our Jane has got a first-rate husband.

Mrs. Brown—Well, you ought to be thankful.

Mrs. Smith—I hope I am, 'Gusty. Of course, he isn't much to look at, and he ain't over smart; but there's one thing, and that is he's saving. Why, the very first day after the marriage he told Jane she'd better let him take the engagement ring back and get the money returned. He said there was no longer any use for her to wear it now that she was married.—Boston Transcript.

—Don't forget that tomorrow is market day.

—Mr. James Bogue has the contract for the erection of the new Cereal works' building.

—The band will run an excursion to Jubilee Point on Victoria Day per City of Peterborough.

—Mr. Ralph Carton, our popular painter, has completed some work in Hastings for Mr. Hank Johnston.

—Football hair will be popular this season. the price of hair cutting has gone up to 20 cents in many places.

—Capt. Lane is getting the City of Peterborough in first class shape before the opening of the season.

There are quite a number of contractors here figuring on the new dam which the Cereal Company propose to build.

—The town of Collingwood formerly employed two assessors at $200 a year but this year one assessor is doing the work.

—The party who threw a stone through Chinaman Jim Chung's laundry window on Tuesday, and injured that celestial, has not yet been discovered.

—There will be a meeting of St. Luke's Bible Class this evening at 8 o'clock, in Long Bros. new parlors. Business of importance. A full attendance requested.

—A distinguished party from the Orient passed through Peterborough on the C.P.R. It comprised, among others, his Highness Prince Yi Chai Kak of Korea, Mr. Ko, Mr. Kim, Mr. Yi and Mr. and Mrs. H. Goffe. They will represent Korea at the coronation of King Edward VII. They travelled from Yokohama, via. Vancouver, and arrived in Toronto on the Pacific Express from North Bay.

Disgraceful Vandalism

Word was received at The Times office yesterday that boys in the vicinity of Riverdale Mission Church, in the extreme south end of the town, had broken the windows of the building with stones and air guns. This is disgraceful, and will require prompt action on the part of the police. No stone should be left unturned to apprehend and punish the culprits.

For the Common Good

Printers' Ink: Every enterprising citizen can benefit his whole town by pushing his own business. The man who has goods to sell will interest those who want his goods. He will also give them reason for spending money in his town. The more he pushes the more they buy. The more careful he is in buying the more anxious people will be to come to him for what they want. Some one will come from quite a distance to deal there. They will tell their friends of what they found and how they were treated. They will help his business. The entire delegation will come next time and buy from others as well as the man who does the pushing. Thus they all get a benefit and all push together.

FELL FROM WINDOW AND BROKE HIS NECK

ABOUT ONE O'CLOCK LAST NIGHT

Mr. A. A. Benson, traveller for the firm of H. W. Petrie, Toronto, met death last night by falling from a window on the second story of the National Hotel about 4.30 last night. Mr. Bension fell a distance of 18 or 20 feet breaking his neck, the broken bones in the neck severing the internal carotid artery. When found he was lying face downward and apparently had not moved after the body had struck the ground. He lived about half an hour but was unconscious. The accident occident occurred shortly after 1 o'clock; after the bus had returned from the midnight the clerk of the hotel heard a crash and went around to the yard to see what the noise was, when he discovered the body of Mr. Benson in his night robe. Coroner Grey was at once sent for and handed the body over to the undertaker, Mr. Comstock.

It was decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Mr. Benson came to Peterborough Tuesday night on the midnight. He was a married man about 63 years of age, his wife, Mrs. A. A. Benson, residing at Mitchell.

No responsibility whatever, rests upon Mr. Conroy, the proprietor of the hotel. It is not known how the accident occurred as the man retired in his usual good health.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY

Another Large Milling Company are Thinking of Locating Here

Yesterday a number of American capitalists were in town with a view to establishing a large milling industry in Peterborough. They were driven around the city by Mayor Denne, who pointed out the advantages Peterborough offered as a manufacturing centre. They seemed greatly impressed with what they saw and heard, and will probably locate here.

METHODIST DISTRICT MEETING.

A MAY WEDDING

Nuptials of Miss Grace Kendry and Mr. Wm Bletcher Yesterday Afternoon

The residence of Mr. T. E. Kendry was the scene of a very pretty wedding yesterday afternoon, when his daughter, Miss Grace C., and Mr. Wm. B. Bletcher, of town, were united in the holy bounds of matrimony. The drawing-room was tastefully decorated for the occasion with evergreens and apple blossoms, underneath an arch of which Rev. Mr. Barlow, pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church, performed the ceremony.

The bride who looked charming in white organdie with trimmings of white satin and baby ribbon, and tucked satin bolero, entered the drawing-room on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, rendered by Miss McCabe.

Miss Lillie Mowry, who was also most becomingly attired in white organdie, performed the duties of bridesmaid. The groom was assisted by Mr. J. G. Gemmell, of town.

A delightful wedding dejeuner served by Long Bros., caterers, was partaken of after the ceremony by the guests, who numbered about 40.

The presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Bletcher were both numerous and costly, testifying to their popularity. They were also the recipients of a very handsome soup tureen and ladle, from the members of Eko camp, of which the groom was a member. The happy couple left on the 4.45 train for Toronto and other western points. They have the sincere and heart felt wishes of a host of friends in town for a full measure of happiness and the smile of fortune throughout life's journey.

THE BIG FIRE AT LINDSAY

THE BUSINESS SECTION THREATENED WITH DESTRUCTION

But was Saved by Heroic Efforts—Peterborough Brigade Telegraphed for—Damage Done

The business portion of Lindsay was in great danger yesterday of destruction. A fire broke out in a stable in rear of premises on Kent-st., owned by Jas. Hamilton and occupied by Anderson's furniture store. The stable was quickly destroyed and the fire communicated to several wooden buildings adjoining, which were also wiped out. In the yard adjoining was the magazine in which the supply of powder and dynamite for Edward's hardware store was kept, and an explosion was expected. By deluging the building with water the contents were so soaked that the explosion was averted.

The outbuildings in the rear of the Daly House were next burned and the hotel caught fire, and a hard fight ensued to save it, which was eventually done. In the meantime the fire had burned its way north across the block and fastened on a terrace owned by Jas Connell, on the south side of Peel-st (the street running parallel with King-st.), there was little prospect of saving the terrace, while heroic efforts were being made to cut the flames off from dwellings adjoining.

The curling rink on the north side of Peel-st, caught fire and for a time made a blaze, but having an iron roof the attack was confined to the front of the building and was beaten off.

The Lundy terrace of stores on William-st. offered a fair mark and the outbuildings were speedily swept away and some considerable damage done to the rear of the terrace, but was finally got under control.

Shortly after three o'clock word was received that the fire had been mastered, but no estimate could be given of the loss.

The interior of the block in which the fire got in its work is a mass of structures and offered a fair mark for the flames.

The Peterborough fire brigade were telegraphed for, and the engine and men were at the station ready to leave, when a message was received saying the fire was under control.

Later,—9.10 p.m.

The whole of one side of the block opposite the Curling Rink was completely destroyed by the flames. There were 14 dwelling houses burned with the outbuildings behind Kent Street.

The Firemen put up a desperate fight to get the fire under control. The men were completely exhausted.

WALKED STRAIGHT INTO BOER TRAP

FIRED AT FROM ALL SIDES

Boer Fifteen Pounder Put Out of Business and Fifteen Killed With One British Shot.

Montreal, May 22.—Pte. Frank. G. Johnson, of No. 1 Company of the Victoria Rifles, son of the late Captain, F. G. Johnson, who went to South Africa with the third regiment, C.M.R., has written a letter home to his mother, giving some additional facts and personal experiences while under fire at the fight at Harts River. His letter is dated from Dreiknil Transvaal, April 4. He writes as follows:

"We left camt at three o'clock on the morning of March 31 and marched all day until about two o'clock in the afternoon when we stopped and fed our horses. We were just looking around for our own dinner when we saw some men appear on the sky line. The officers at once got their glasses on them and decided they were Boers. We were ordered to dig trenches, and had no sooner got the order than bang-whiz went the first Boer fifteen-pounder, the shell landing just a few yards past our camp. We were then ordered out with rifles and bandoliers into the firing line all around the camp. Bryson and I were running out together when our fifteen pounder replied to the Boers from behind us. The noise it made, together with the concussion of the air knocked us both down, but we got up again and into our places and commenced to shoot. I cannot begin to describe my feelings when the first shell came into camp. I was not exactly scared, but I was rather nervous. When I got settled in the trench the fight was raging all around and the noise was pretty bad. On my left was an old man, about forty, and he posted me on the different sounds of the bullets whistling over our heads. We had been about an hour in our trench when the Boers got a cross fire on us, when we were ordered to vacate it and go about two hundred yards further on. I jumped up with the rest and we started to run as fast as we could go. The bullets were coming so thick that you would imagine that someone was playing a harp somewhere near us.

FIVE GUNS EACH.

"The Boers had five guns I believe, and we also had five and they were each trying to put each other out of action for about two hours. One of our artillery officers bet £5 with another that he would put the Boer fifteen pounder out of action He succeeded in hitting the gun, breaking it to pieces and at the same time killing about twenty-five Boers, all with the one shot. so the Boer doctor told us after the fight.

"The Boers led us right into a trap by all accounts. They were formed up into the shape of a horseshoe and we followed an empty convoy of their right into it. As soon as they had us right they closed in and there we were completely surrounded. They were shooting from all sides and nobody was safe on that account, because if we were firing from one side, their bullets were coming from all sides and there was just as big a chance of getting hit from behind as there was from the front. I was loading my rifle when a bullet came in and hit about two inches over my head and knocked about a pound of mud into my eyes. We had eight killed, two died from their wounds and there were forty-five others wounded, which will show you that it was pretty hot for a time.

"The Boers lost nearly four times as many men as we did as far as I can make out, but that won't make up for the poor chaps that we buried before we left. The fight took place at Boschbolt and I think there will be a bar for it. We left there about three o'clock the next day and were out all afternoon in the rain and all that night. We got into camp the following day and we are having a rest here waiting for remounts. We lost nearly two hundred horses all together. As soon as we get our nags we have to start again and chase Delarey till we catch him so we can expect a few more fights before we are through.

AN AWFUL DEATH ROLL THE PEOPLE HORROR

Stricken at the Prrospects of Anothsr Eruption

ABOUT SIX THOUSAND ESCAPE

In a Desperate Condition—Twenty Eight Thousand Perished at St. Pierre

Special to The Times.

Kingstown, W.I., May 23—The relief steamers now on the scene cano which occurred on the night of the 18th, was worse than reported. Buildings everywhere are demolished, and people are coming in to the city from all directions. The horror of the situation on St. Vincent is appalling.

The alarming report, that Unham Mountain, near the Marriaqua valley, an old and apparently extinct crater, is showing signs of activity, is confirmed. This volcano is only about six miles from Kingstown and may overwhelm the city at any moment.

Fort De France, Martinique, May 23—The first official estimate of the results of the explosion of Mont Pelle have been announced. This gives 28,-000 as the number of people buried in the ruins of St. Pierre. Six thousand persons were rescued by steamships or fled to places of safety. Three thousand probably were drowned. This is the most complete estimate made so far.

The relief steamers now on the scene are the American ships Cincinnati, Sterling, Potomac and Longfellow; the French cruiser Suchet and the British supply boat Mariana.

Owing to red tape it has been found impossible, up to the present time, to unload the supplies sent by the Chamber of Commerce of New York.

The bodies of Thomas T. Prentis, American consul, and James Japp British consul, have been identified and will be brought here for shipment. Both bodies are bruised by the fall of lava and stones almost beyond recognition.

A party from here has gone to St. Pierre on the British cruiser Indefatigable, carrying with them coffins, for the purpose of recovering the bodies of the family of Thomas J. Prentis, the late United States consul at that place, who was killed in the disaster.

The interment of the remains will take place here and will be conducted with military honors. The Indefatigable brought 120 tons of supplies.

There was another eruption from Mont Pelle yesterday. Ashes fell here. The volcano is still violently smoking, and there are no signs of it ceasing its activity.

The United States cruiser Cincinnati and the United States government tug Potomac will be stationed here indefinitely. The Potomac will shortly go to the island of Guadeloupe to bring to this place the furniture, books, etc., of the office of the United States consul there, Louis F. Ayme.

New York, May 23.—Cornelius Bliss, national treasurer of the West Indies relief, had received up to last evening a total of $94,000.

Gustav H. Schwab presided at a meeting of the executive committee of the associated relief committees of this city yesterday and presented the following cablegram received by the New York chamber of commerce from the chamber of commerce of the Barbadoes:

"Ascertained conditions St. Vincent's Damage, £50,000; 1,600 deaths; 160 wounded in hospitals; 4,000 destitute. Immediate wants supplied, but help required for the next six months."

The following reply was sent,—

"Chamber of Commerce, Barbadoes,—Cable received, Our agent on way to islands, authorized to act.—Gustav H. Schwab, Chairman Executive Committee."

Mr. Schwab reported that the Madiana reached Fort de France Saturday and that A. E. Outerbridge, agent of the Quebec steamship line, had received a cablegram from the captain, which did not indicate that there had been any hitch over the landing of the supplies purchased by the New York chamber of commerce, and that, therefore, he presumed that those supplies were in the hands of those who needed them. The committee decided to go on with its work and to continue to receive subscriptions.

Montreal, May 23.—The family of Engineer Charles Evans, of the SS. Roraima, which was lost in St. Pierre harbour, Martinique, as the result of the recent eruption of Mont Pelle, has received a telegram from the firm of A. A. Outerbridge & Co., New York, announcing that Mr. Evans is among the survivors of the disaster and that he is at present an inmate of the hospital at Fort de France, Martinique. The telegram reads as follows: "Engineer Evans in hospital at Fort de France." From another source the family has learned that Engineer Evans was very badly burned as the result of the shower of red-hot ashes from Mont Pelee, but how he was saved from death is not yet known. A letter, however, is expected to arrive shortly in the city from him, and this will doubtless contain the information that is now lacking.

EARL OF EGMONT ARRESTED

Drunk and Disorderly with Lena Perceva In Piccadilly

London, May 20.—The Earl of Egmont woman was charged also with having attempted to commit suicide in her cell. She pleaded guilty to the drunk and disorderly charge, but denied that she had tried to commit suicide. The woman was discharged. Perceval is the family name to the Hall of Assembly, where the throne who failed to answer and forfeited his bail when the case was called and Lena Perceval, who said she had no occupation, were charged in the Marlborough street Police Court this morning with being drunk and disorderly in Piccadilly last night. The of the earl of Egmont.

The Earl of Egmont is the eighth of that title. He was born in 1856 and in 1881 married Miss Kate Howell, daughter of Warwick Howell, of South Carolina She was a barmaid at a refreshment bar on the London underground railroad.

The Earl has had a varied career. He was formerly a sailor before the mast and rose to the rank of fourth officer. He then joined the Metropolitan Fire Brigade and afterwards became caretaker of the Town Hall at Chelsea. In which capacity he once turned the hose on a stormy political meeting, and on another occasion turned off the lights when a ball was proceeding. Subsequently he worked as a laborer in the Cheshire salt mines.

His family eventually got him out of the country by allowing him £5 a week on condition that he would reside in Cape Town. He succeeded his cousin to the title in 1897.

FRENZIED PEOPLE CLAMOR TO BE TAKEN AWAY

Terror, Not Destitution, Sends Them Flocking Into Fort de France

Special to The Times.

Fort Fe France, Island of Martinique, Wednesday, May 21, 4p.m.—Mont Pelee seems to be resting after yesterday's fearful manifestation of energy. Streams of frightened refugees have been pouring into Fort de France from all the surrounding country. These people are not destitute, but they are terrified. They want only one thing and that is to be taken far away from this island, with which, they say, the gods are angry, and which they will destroy by fire before it sinks under the sea. The consuls here and the officers of the war vessels in the harbor are waylaid by scores of persons crazed with fear and begging to be carried away.

Veiled in Volcanic Clouds.

The weather is now calm and beautiful, but the mountain is veiled in volcanic clouds, which often assume a very threatening aspect, and occasional rumblings are heard. Some heavy and very welcome rain fell this morning.

The United States steamer Dixie, Captain Perry, from New York arrived to-day after, a quick and safe passage. Her passengers include many world-famous scientists, Professor Robert T. Hill, Government geologist; Prof. C. E. Borchgrevink, the Antarctic explorer; Messrs. George Curtis and George Kennan, and many magazine writers and correspondents are also among those who arrived on the steamer.

This morning the commanders of the war vessels now here went to inspect St. Pierre. With the greatest difficulty the party succeeded in making a landing. The effects of the outburst of yesterday were tremendous. The huge basalt towers of the cathedral were pulverized, and the walls were hurled flat to the earth.

Furious Blast of Blasting Gas.

The bombardment of volcanic stones is not sufficient to account for this, and all evidences point to the passage of a furious blast of blasting gas, traveling at enormous speed, and with incalculable force. The deposit of boulders, ashes, and angular stones is enormous. Not a living human being saw what happened at St. Pierre yesterday morning. This second eruption was many times more violent than that which effaced St. Pierre and swept its people from the earth. Nor has all volcanic activity ceased. Vast columns of smoke and gas still pour from the great craters. Now fissures have opened on the mountain sides and are vomiting yellow whirlwinds which rush intermittently, now from one point and now from another. Boiling mud is also thrown out at times in torrents that reach the sea and produce small tidal waves.

Fiery Roaring Destruction.

From a somber, silent city of death and desolation, St. Pierre has become a hideous amphitheater of fiery roaring destruction.

The people are convinced that God is angry with the island, and means to scourge it with fire, and then sink it in the ocean. Utter and unreasoning fear possesses all souls. Even Fort de France is believed to be unsafe. The presence of the relief ships, however, is helpful to the people.

The scientists who have arrived will examine into the question of the danger of the peaks of Carbet, near Fort de France, becoming active volcanoes. The outburst of yesterday probably means a ruined island, as all confidence is lost.

"We want not food, but only to leave," is the single and unanimous cry of all, rich and poor alike.

May Take the People Away

Paris, May 21. —The Minister of the Colonies, M. de Crais has cabled to Governor l'Huerre, at Fort de France, instructing him to make all possible arrangements for the embarkation of the inhabitants of Martinique in the event of circumstances necessitating the evacuation of that island.

CANADA LOOKING FOR PREFERENTIAL TRADE

The Canadian Board of Trade to Make a United Move—to Make Canada the Principal Highway of the Empire

Too much importance cannot be attached to the conference of the Boards of Trade of the cities of the Dominion which will be held in Toronto on the 4th and 5th of next month. It is to be hoped that President Dumble, of the Peterborough Board, will see that a strong representation goes from here. The most prominent business men of noted business centres of the provinces will be in attendance, and their resolutions and recommendations, though of a colonial character, will be on matters of the greatest moment and of far-reaching effect.

The Ottawa representatives will be John Coates, president; Sir Sandford Fleming, Thomas McFarlane, G. F. Henderson, and Cecil Bethune. Sir Sandford Fleming urges the laying of the Pacific cable as soon as possible, and also state-owned cables from Australia to India and South Africa, and from South Africa to England, completing a circle round the globe.

Thomas McFarlane's recommendation is as follows: "That, failing the establishment of preferential trade between all British communities, an effort be made to establish a customs Union with Australia and other colonies and dependencies of the Empire by inducing them to impose a uniform duty, over and above their ordinary tariffs, on importations from countries outside the Union, and devoting the proceeds to subsidizing steamship lines, laying submarine cables and contributing to the naval defence of the Empire."

The Vancouver Board of Trade will present five resolutions and two recommendations. The first resolution expresses its feeling of the need of urgency in arranging inter-Imperial and inter-colonial reciprocity, and referring to its memorial recently presented to Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the subject. The memorial desires Sir Wilfrid at the conference of Premiers to urge claims of Canada to preferential treatment of its products in United Kingdom and the colonies, to endeavor to obtain such arrangements by similar concessions on Canada's part, and to arrange the matter by means of a system of customs rebates. Another resolution urges the bringing of pressure to bear on the Imperial and Dominion Governments to establish systems of Imperial transportation and make Canada the principal highway of the Empire.

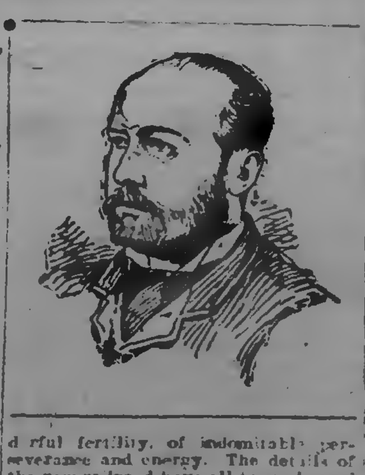
The Vancouver Board further advocates that the integral part of the empire should contribute to its defence, and endorses the establishment of Imperial postal and telegraph services and the decimal system throughout the empire. A discussion of the memorial of the London, Eng., Chamber of Commerce on Canada's need of a bankruptcy law is also recommended.

VAN HORNE'S WORK IN CUBAN RAILWAY

The Late President of The Canadian Pacific Railway

Has Completed a System of Railways in Cuba

Last Spike in the System to be Driven This Week



Special to The Times.

New York, May 23—Among the passengers who arrived by the Ward Line steamer Monteroy from Havana was Sir Wm. Von Horne, who said that he expected that the last spike in the Santa Clara and Santiago railway would be driven next week. He also said: "We shall have no official celebration of our opening, as I don't believe in such things, but I believe the event will be auspicious, and an augury of good for Cuba. We are building a number of branch lines as feeders to our system."

William C. Van Horne, President of the Canadian Pacific, was born in the United States, although now a subject of Great Britain. Very early in life he began railroading, attracting public attention for the first time to any extent, as general manager of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad System. Later he assumed the position of General Manager of the company of which he is now President. He is a man of wonderful fertility, of indomitable perseverance and energy. The details of the new railroad have all been planned by him.

In addition to being a great railroad man, Mr. Van Horne is one of the most famous geologists in America, having a collection equal to that of any held by a private individual in this country.

CANADA'S MANY ADVANTAGES

People are beginning to learn that Canada is the best country under the sun to live in. In this land we have "peace and plenty," with all the advantages that the highest civilization affords. Here are a few of Canada's merits:

It has no volcanos,
No earthquakes,
No poisonous snakes,
No crop failures,
No tornados,
No cyclones,
No dangerous animals.
It has
The best water,
The finest lakes,
The best soil in America,
Plenty of timber,
The best fish, and a climate that is simply glorious.

Items of Interest

London, May 21—Russia has recently spent about 100,000,000 rubles in the construction of strategic railways, designed to facilitate the transportation of troops in the direction of the German and Austrian borders.

There are three such lines already under construction. The most important of these is the line from Bologoe, half way between St. Petersburg and Moscow, on the St. Petersburg-Moscow road, to the southwest into Poland, following the route Bologoe, Ostashkov, Welki, Luki, Polotsk, Velikia, Lida, Wolkovisk, Seidlee. This line leads directly from the interior to the wedge of Poland projecting into Germany and between Germany and Austria, an area of the greatest importance strategically. The terminus is in the centre of the area, and is protected on the north, against East Prussia, by the fortified Narew line, and against the west and south, Silesia and Galicia, by the fortified towns of Warsaw, Ivargorod and Brest-Litowski. It is evidently of great value as a line of advance in the strategic deployment of the army. The country presents no difficulties to construction, and it is expected that the line will be in operation in 1894. It will also serve as a connecting line for the transportation of troops for the lines crossing it, namely: the Smolensk-Dunaburg line, the Minsk-Wilna line, and the Rovno-Wilna line.

Another new line will be in operation July 1, 1902, the line Kiev-Radomysl-Novgrad Volynsk-Kovel, running north of and generally parallel to the present greatly overloaded line, Kiev-Kasjatin-Rovno-Warsaw. The line is about 260 miles long. It will facilitate, for the transportation of troops from the southwestern part of Russia toward the same strategic point.

Russia will thus have six lines of advance to the frontier available for the transportation of troops, namely:

1.—St. Petersburg-Wilna-Warsaw.
3.—Moscow—Minsk—Warsaw.
4.—Orel—Briansk—Warsaw
5.—Kiev—Kasjatin — Rovno — Warsaw.
6.—Kiev—Radomysl—Kovel.

Nevertheless, the distances in Russia are so great that in spite of these improvements and the fact that about three-fifths of the entire Russian army is concentrated in Kovno, Poland and Volhynia, on the German and Austrian border, Russia cannot yet hope to effect the strategic deployment of her army so quickly as either of these two countries.

Moreover, the transportation of reserves and supplies from the interior will be greatly delayed on account of the comparatively thin network of railroads in extensive parts of the Empire. To overcome this difficulty in a degree at least efforts are being directed toward building lines through the more thickly populated of these districts and connecting the principal towns on these with the lines running westward.

For this purpose the line Viatka-Vologda-St. Petersburg, running nearly straight east from the latter, about 690 miles long, has also been begun and other lines are planned.

NOMINATIONS YESTERDAY.

THEY PASS OFF QUIETLY IN BOTH PETERBORO' RIDINGS

Hon. J R Stratton and J. W. Miller, West Peterborough. Wm Anderson and Dr Ford, East Peterborough

The official nomination of candidates for West Peterborough in the general Provincial elections for 1902 took place at the Court House yesterday before Returning Officer, J. A. Hall, Sheriff.

The attendance outside of those necessary to give effect to the nomination was limited to half a dozen spectators, it being understood that no addresses would be delivered.

J. R. Stratton, Liberal, was nominated by Mr. Peter Hamilton, seconded by Mr. Quinlan.

J. W. Miller, Conservative, was nominated by Mr. T. F. Bradburn, seconded by Mr. George Ball.

Mr. G. M. Roger was named as Mr. Stratton's agent and Mr. G. W. Hatton as Mr. Miller's.

East Peterborough Nominations.

Norwood, May 22.—The nominations for the East Riding of Peterborough, took place here to-day, the Returning Officer being Mr. B. Morrow, Registrar, Peterborough. The following nominations were made—

Mr. William Anderson, nominated by Mr. Thos. Blezard, seconded by Mr. John Fitzpatrick.

Dr. Ford, nominated by Mr. John Lancaster, seconded by Mr. H. A. Moore.

At the conclusion of the nomination proceedings, a joint political meeting was held, the speakers being Mr. Anderson, Mr. Blezard, and Mr. D. Fraser, for the Liberals, and Dr. Ford and Mr. Garvin, for the Conservatives.

There was a large attendance of electors from all parts of the riding.

Malt Breakfast Food

A Breakfast Dish That Pleased Every Palate.

A food that pleases every palate, soothes the weakest stomach, and thus aids digestion, means much to those who, in the past, have not been able to fully enjoy the first meal of the day—breakfast. A breakfast that is not satisfying or that is not fully enjoyed, cannot fit old or young for the duties of the day.

Malt Breakfast Food not only pleases the palates of young and old by its delicious flavor, but it imparts to the body and brain a vim and vigor that ordinary oatmeal and common foods cannot give. It is the Malt with all its virtues and valuable properties that does the good work. Try this grand health food in your home if you are a stranger to it. It gives a new life and healthy appetite to the dyspeptic victim. Ask your grocer for Malt Breakfast Food.

Leave has been given by the Turkish Government to run a steamer on the Dead Sea. As an English paper puts it, the whirr of the propellor will be heard over the sunken ruins of Sodom and Gomorra. It is some years, however since the railway ran into Jerusalem, and a steamer on the Dead Sea, is a natural sequence. The length of this remarkable body of water is 46 miles, and its breadth from five to nine miles. The most remarkable fact about it is that its surface is no less than 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea. The average height of the cliffs along the shore is 2,000 feet, some forming sheer precipices of naked rock. The whistle of the steamer should raise some weird echoes, but for pleasure we think we should prefer a trip on Lake Memphremagog.

THE CHEESE BOARD'S OPENING MEETING

GOOD ATTENDANCE OF BUYERS AND SELLERS

Highest Prices Offered Was 10 3-4 Cents—The Appointment of an Inspector Discussed—The Necessity of Having a High Standard in Quality for the Export Trade

The first meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board for the season opened Wednesday morning in the Council Chamber. There was a good attendance of salesmen, and the following buyers were present: Messrs. Kerr, Fitzgerald, Cook, Whitton, Rollins and Wrighton.

The following factories were boarded:

Keene	70
Warminster	45
Shearer	45
Central Smith	56
North Smith	30
Villiers	45
Warsaw	56
Westwood	70
Oak Dale	60
Daisy D.	30
Melrose Abbey	100
Lakefield	50
Pine Grove	40
Otonabee Union	18
Maple Leaf	31
Myrtle	46
Young's Point	25
Lang	50
Indian River	40
East Emily	25
Trewern	65
Bensfort	30
Cavanville	70
Norwood	100
Fleetwood	60
Buckhorn	50

The President, Mr. Drummond, remarked his pleasure at so large an attendance of buyers and sellers. He made reference to the new rules, and hoped they would be abided by. Mr. Drummond referred to the advisability of establishing a central cooling room, but considerable expense would be involved. He thought the factories should, for the present, be kept as cool as possible. The demands of the export trade was making it imperative that the cheese should be cured in a low temperature. He thought the appointment of an instructor to devote his services to some twenty of the factories would be a good step. He expressed sympathy with Mr. Andrews, of Bensfort, one of the best cheesemakers, and a man highly respected, in his long continued illness, and hoped he would soon recover. Mr. Drummond expressed appreciation of the kindness of the Ontario Bank in again presenting sale books to the Board.

Mr. Whitten spoke with reference to the appointment of an instructor. He thought it would be wise if the County of Peterborough would hire an official to look after every detail of cheesemaking, from the time it left the hands of the farmers, until it issued from the factory in the shape of cheese. Instructors were being employed in other places, and Mr. Whitton thought Peterborough should also be in line.

Mr. Riddle read an article from the Montreal Gazette, showing how the employment of an instructor had been arranged for in Eastern townships, by the factories contributing to the cost. He advised that the factories should not mind the expenditure of a few dollars if the cheese were to be benefitted.

Mr. Cook pointed to the fact that Canadian cheese was deteriorating in quality, and the cause was the milk. He favored the appointment of an inspector. The present inspector, however had all he could do.

Mr. Blezard said that everything possible should be done to retain the high standard of the Peterborough cheese board. He cited causes of impurity in the milk as being due to carelessness of patrons, and there should be an inspector. Factories would do well to refuse milk that was not up to condition.

Mr. Rollins also urged the necessity for cleanliness and precaution in preserving the best qualities of milk. He[illegible] vor of the appointment of an inspector.

Mr. Fitzgerald remarked with pleasure upon the large attendance. He made reference to what he considered an injustice that had been done by one buyer in having purchased May cheese off the board, contrary to rule and precedent. He wished an explanation of the matter.

Mr. Blezard held that until the first meeting of the Board, no factory could be considered as being on the Board.

Mr. Drummond again spoke in favor of the appointment of an inspector. He also stated that the Board's cheesemaker had built an icehouse in connection with his curing room, thus making a low temperature available, which was very desirable.

Mr. Galvin said he had no confidence in factories that refused to employ the means they have. He held in paying by the test the first step was taken, but until this was tried it might not be wise to take the second. He did not agree with Mr. Blezard with reference to selling cheese off the Board. He, himself, had sold cheese because others did, but he did not feel justified.

Bidding commenced with Mr. Fitzgerald's offer of 10c. Mr. Whitten went an eighth better; Mr. Kerr went 10 3-16. Mr. Whitten 10 1-4. Mr. Fitzgerald. 10 5-16. Mr. Whitten 10 7-16. Mr. Fitzgerald 10 1-2. Mr. Rollins, 10 9-16, Mr. Fitzgerald 10 5-8. Mr. Whitten, 10 3-4. Mr. Whitten's bid of 10 3-4 held and was accepted by Norwood, Melrose Abbey, Westwood, Villiers, Bensfort, Shearer, Keene, Lang.

Mr. Fitzgerald offered 10 5-8 for further, but Mr. Rollins called 10 11-16 He named and was accepted by Warminster, North Smith, Warsaw, Oakdale, Daisy D., Maple Leaf, Pine Grove, Young's Point and Indian River.

Mr. Fitzgerald at 10 5-8, called Myrtle, Trewern, East Emily, Cavanville, Buckhorn, Fleetwood, Otonabee Union.

Mr. Whitten took Lakefield and Central Smith at 10 11-16.

The Board adjourned for two weeks.

"Wait one moment, doctor," called the nervous groom. "Is it the right or left hand the ring goes on?"

"And, doctor, is—is it kisstermary to cuss the bride?"

I am in receipt of the first suggestion for a name for the new Medicine which is soon to be put on the market. The contributor suggests "Managin." He says this means Man Again. He claims that it is a smooth name; that it means something; that it is euphonious. Remember, the medicine to be named is a man builder, that it will make Richard Himself again and to the one sending the most appropriate name for this medicine the sum of $5 in gold is to be paid. Try your hand. Managin is good—but there may be better It has been said, you know, that the Unthunk thoughts are better than some of the Thunk ones.

IN A NUTSHELL.

The whole matter is summed up briefly in this paragraph from Printers' Ink: "There is some good in all advertising and all advertising does some good; but the best advertising and the advertising which does the greatest good is daily newspaper advertising." — Everybody reads The Times.

IN SOCIETY.

I had a perfectly lovely time at Mrs. Dutch's "at home" the other day. It was a very glad affair, but Mrs. Dutch can afford it as she has all kinds of money. The most remarkable part of the function was the presence of a number of musicians who talked and ate with the guests just as if they were in society, tho. Mrs. Dutch is so musical that she never insists on musicians eating in the kitchen, where they really belong. I suppose she believes in art for art's sake, but it struck me as rather off. Of course it was nice for the musicians. Nothing pleases an artist so much as to be permitted to eat in the parlor. The prospect of a hearty meal seemed to put M. Gotthere in full voice, for he sang divinely. All the other musicians seemed inspired by the same pleasant prospect. O, dear, I haven't told you about the decorations. They were simply the limit, and I filled two notebooks with them. I shall have to leave the details to the next.

FRANK SPEAKING

This is The Time For Plain Talk To Our Relatives and Friends Who Suffer

WE SHOULD WARN THEM OF PERILS AND DANGERS

Tell Them of

Paine's Celery Compound

Nature's Specific For the Weak, Brokendown and Diseased

Frank, honest speaking of husband to wife, wife to husband and friend to friend is more urgently called for to-day than ever before.

In the spring season when the husband notes that his wife's vitality is low—when he knows she has headaches, backaches, sideaches, is nervous, sleepless, has loss of appetite and energy, perhaps racked with the pains of rheumatism or neuralgia, it is criminal for him to try to console her with the thought that all will be well when the fine weather comes in. It is the imperative duty of such husbands to suggest—nay to insist that wise and effectual treatment be at once resorted to. Frank and plain speaking at the right moment will often save a precious life.

Wives should act in the same way towards their husbands, when the first symptoms of ill health are apparent. Friend should speak to friend, giving kindly warning and advice, above all, pointing to that marvellous spring health-giver, Paine's Celery Compound.

Many a life has been saved by the kind and unselfish recommendations of those who have been made well and strong by Paine's Celery Compound. The use of the great medicine has been urged upon sick, suffering and diseased friends, and heaven has blessed their work. Honest physicians and conscientious druggists have saved the lives of many by promptly recommending the use of Dr. Phelps' wonderful prescription. While speaking to those in ill health, always give them to understand that Paine's Celery Compound will without fail meet their necessities at this season.

Farm Notes.

Care should be exercised in the use of poisoned solutions for spraying, as many insects that are friends of the farmer may be destroyed. Bees have been exterminated in some sections by spraying, though something depends upon the kinds of plants sprayed.

We clip from an exchange the following directions for killing lice on cattle—Dust the animals thoroughly with fresh insect powder; rub in well, or else part the hair so the powder will reach the pests. In about a week, dust again to kill any mites that might have hatched. The other is: Make a strong tea of cedar twigs; wash the lousy animal with this tea; this last is effectual in cleansing buildings, coops, roosts, poles, etc., of lice.

No greater mistake is ever made than to suppose that by selecting the largest eggs from the basket for hatching improvement of the poultry is sure to follow. There is no makeshift in this industry. Careful selection of the breeding stock, males and females, alone will insure that grading up so desired by every breeder. There is no room today for slipshod methods in poultry culture, and the breeder who does not select a breeding pen from his best birds and keep them by themselves does not deserve and cannot hope to maintain the quality of his stock.

More pigs are lost in the summer season from improper feeding than from any other cause. They are compelled to consume foods that are not conducive to thrift, and which lead to disease in the herds. Some feeders keep slop in barrels, which ferments until sour, having a very disagreeable odor, the pigs being fed largely upon the slop. This kind of food is more injurious in summer than in winter, as it induces bowel disease. The best slop is milk and bran, freshly made, with grass, vegetables and plenty of pure water, which will induce growth and keep the pigs in good condition.

Use a Good Sire.

If there is one thing more than another which pedigree breeding has taught it is the value of using a good sire. It takes a long time before this lesson can be universally appreciated. There are some breeders whom nothing but adversity will teach; others are willing to profit by the experience of the many, and are ready to adopt the lessons which can be obviously deduced. It is a pity that in these times of enlightenment and advanced ideas the simplest lessons cannot be absorbed by small breeders. It is with the small breeder that the future lies, and the sooner he adapts himself to a more successful policy the better will it be for himself and for the breed which he favors. It is not enough to have a well-bred sire. That certainly is a primary consideration, for, as every breeder knows, there is nothing more perplexing in breeding than the frequency with which atavism occurs. It is satisfactory to note, however, that when characteristics have become more fixed by years of registered breeding, breeders are more and more coming to regard it as essential that the trumpeted merits of good back breeding should be displayed in the animal itself. The old principle that like produces like is truer now than it was fifty years ago, because of the increased prepotency of line bred stock. Nothing condemns the policy of a breeder more effectively than the use of an indifferent horse on good mares, or, for that matter, moderate bull on better cows. As a rule, the farmer is not deficient in useful breeding mares or roomy cows, but it would form painful reading to learn how often he had misused his trust by the use of an indifferent sire. It is a very safe rule to patronize a sire better than the females. There is everything to gain and nothing to lose. The initial cost is a mere bagatelle, compared with the difference in price of the progeny. It is a misfortune that many farmers expect too much of their mares or their cows. This, at all events, seems a reasonable deduction from their policy when they use very indifferent sires. The point we wish to accentuate is that it pays to use a good sire. It is short-sighted policy to expect too much of the dams.—Farmer and Stockbreeder.

Sore Mouths in Horses.

A sore mouth in a horse is frequently the cause of his not feeding properly. In cases where a horse has lost his appetite or does not redily eat his food it is well to examine his mouth, if the fact of his being off his feed cannot be traced to any apparent cause. A sore mouth may be due to several causes. In young horses it is generally due to teething troubles, which make the mouth more or less tender and interfere with the feeding. In such cases the only thing to be done is to provide the food in a state which will permit of its being easily chewed and masticated. The oats should be crushed, bran mashes and roots should be given, and the hay should not be hard, and free from woody stems.

In older horses the permanent molars are sometimes the cause of a horse not being able to chew his food, and of his having a sore mouth. The molars sometimes have sharp edges and points which hurt the inside of the cheeks, and cause considerable pain when the horse is eating. In this case they require filing with a rasp, but this operation can only be performed by a skilful hand. At other times a horse may be prevented from masticating his food properly by one of the molar teeth being longer than the rest, which prevents the molars in the upper jaw from coming into contact with those in the lower jaw. In this case again professional advice is required.

Lampas not infrequently is the cause of a horse having a sore mouth. Lampas consists of an inflamed condition of the roof of the mouth or of the palate, and is caused by various means. In young horses it is due often to the growth of the teeth, while in older ones it is caused through indigestion or by irregularities of the molar teeth. The treatment accordingly varies and depends on the cause of lampas. Ignorant grooms and stablemen sometimes suggest burning as a remedy. This is of course a cruel and perfectly inadmissible remedy, and one which should not be adopted on any account.

Another form of inflammation of the mouth is known under the name of "stomatitis."—Farmer and Stockbreeder.

Made Good Soldiers.

Writing in The Upper Canada Times, A.W.P. gives an entertaining sketch of the mountaineers of Virginia, in the course of which he tells the following story:—During the war with Spain an attempt was made to enroll a mountain regiment in West Virginia. Indeed these lean, fierce, slouching backswoodsmen should make superb irregular fighters. But red tape demanded that they should be drilled, and drilled they were, at Charleston. But the weather was warm and many were met together, and to a mountaineer heat and society suggest corn whiskey. So after a long and heartbreaking day for perspiring officers and files of the guard, the whole regiment "guessed they'd quit," broke ranks and surged into town—a thirsty wave. A sweeping operation a la Kitchener landed three hundred in the guardhouse before sunrise, and the prospects were bright for the capture of all, when, mirabile dictu, the guard-house rose in air, showed for a moment like a giant centipede, then was tilted over by many willing hands, and the parched three hundred again swept down to spread Chaos and Old Night in Charleston.

"Vatever is de Rule."

This tale, according to The Philadelphia Times, was told by Judge Pennypacker, who has an excellent reputation as a maker of fervid anti-British speeches, in beginning a response to a toast at a Pennsylvania German banquet in Philadelphia. The story, he said, showed the readiness of the Pennsylvania Dutchman to obey those in authority. It also casts some light upon the occurrences of the American civil war, and goes to suggest that even "farm-burning" is not absolutely unprecedented:—

In 1864 Sheridan, under orders, burned every barn from a valley above Staunton to a certain point below Winchester. A band of angry rebels followed this raid, watching for a chance to pick up any stragglers. Among others who fell into their hands was a little Pennsylvania Dutchman, who quietly turned to his captors and inquired:

"Vat you fellows going to do mit me?"

The reply came short and sharp:

"Hang you."

"Vell," he said, meekly, "vatever is de rule."

Wanted a Meal.

A visiting Englishman, says The New York Sun, who attended a dinner given last week by a suburban hostess whose hospitality is notoriously inadequate made a reply to her that it will be difficult for her to live down. Her dinners have been referred to as "samples," and invitations to them are not accepted with alacrity the second time. Her wealth is large, however, and her social persistence is untiring, so that her friends are obliged to accept some of her invitations. The Englishman was a big fellow, whose family had been kind to the hostess when she was in London. The dinner was of the usual inadequate kind that her friends expected. It served merely as an appetizer to the hearty Englishman, and when the coffee was served, indicating that the dinner was at an end, his expression of dissatisfaction was amusing to the other guests. The hostess did not notice it, however, and she said to him amiably:

"Now, do tell me when we may have the pleasure of having you dine with us again?"

"Immediately, madam, immediately," was his unexpected reply. Fortunately for the hostess another guest remarked that the weather had been very "funny," and this permitted a burst of appreciative laughter that ought to have stamped the weather as a wag.

Where Rhodes Rests.

The Matoppo Hills stretch in a northeasterly direction from Buluwayo for a distance of a hundred miles, their greatest breadth being thirty-five miles. The place of Mr. Rhodes' burial is situated about thirty miles from the town.

Near by is a part of the hills which bears the important title of "The World's View." The prospect from any chosen summit makes a deep impression on the spectator. It is impressive without being picturesque. As far as eye can see there is spread out before him a panorama of treeless mountains of varied shapes, mostly of abrupt outline, suggestive of a turbulent sea stilled by an omnipotent hand. The base of the hills is fringed with trees, and here and there is a clump of thick bush. In places great gorges draw black lines between the mountains, which, moreover, are punctured with giant caves, where the Matabele took refuge during the rebellion, and could have held out for an indefinite period had not the genius and daring of Mr. Rhodes put an end to the outbreak.

The predominant note is massiveness and stability, for the hills are of granite, but the hardness is toned down by the green of the lower foliage and the soft, velvety azure of the sky above. It was the poet in Cecil Rhodes which impelled him to his choice.

In places the traveller comes upon groups of ruins, which in this out-of-the-world region strangely stir the imagination.

It is difficult to realize that these habitations were occupied by gold-seekers so long ago as 1,000 B.C. When one thinks of Rhodesia, it is invariably of the great possibilities which the future holds for the country. But what of Rhodesia's past? Three thousand years ago men as gold-hungry as the "greenest" prospector of to-day scoured the Matoppos and the surrounding country for the precious metal. These crumbling ruins once contained the furnaces for the retorting and smelting of the gold. In many quarters huge excavations are found, where the ancients dug far down into the bowels of the earth in search of the metal. Several of these mines are still the largest on the earth's surface. The galleries are caked with layers of soot from the torches of the workers. One historian estimates that the ancient miners discovered millions of pounds' worth of gold in Rhodesia.

"What are you in prison for, my friend?"

"Stealin' a pin, ma'am."

"What?"

"That's right, ma'am. It had a diamond fastened at one end of it."—Chicago Tribune.

The Poultry Yard.

Qualities of the Andalusian.

The Andalusian is a member of the Mediterranean family; it might be called a Blue Laced Minorca or Leghorn, as one might wish, since it is formed like them. Some follow the more gamey type of the Leghorn or Spanish, while others are built on the exact lines of the Minorca. These fowls undoubtedly came from the union or cross of the solid white and solid black fowl. In early days when we had the old time pure white and pure black Spanish with but small white lobes or face, they came of that type, and now we have them of both the Leghorn and the Minorca type.

The slate-blue colored hen can be seen in almost every flock of barnyard fowls. Some of them are laced like the Andalusian. The same manner of color and lacing is seen in the Jersey Blues. The shade of color and style of marking are not unusual, but the real beauty is best shown as cultivated in the well bred Andalusians of to-day, for the elegance of which, as seen in this country, much credit is due Mr. Newton Cosh, who has done so much for this breed in the way of cultivating size, shape and color to American notions of beauty.

The Andalusians are a fine sized fowl; the females range from 4 1-2 to 6 pounds in weight, the males from 5 1-2 to 7 pounds, with an inclination for those that have the Minorca type to range a little larger in size than the others. They are wonderfully good egg producers; their eggs are large and white in color of shell. We should class the Andalusian among the best of our Leghorns for egg producers, and might be called a general-purpose Leghorn, for they are not only good egg producers, but are equally good table poultry, and will bear confinement in yards and do well.

Learning Wisdom From Mistakes.

The first and greatest mistake I made was to get every new breed that I could hear or read about, when the fact was I only had enough room for a few of one breed. I did not pay enough attention to the health of my chicks, and the result was that cholera got among them, and my young chicks died faster than I could bury them. I got heartsick, and let my stock run down to only a few for family use. I took all the poultry papers I could read, but they did not help me. I let my chickens run where they pleased and forage where they could find food; only, they were not allowed inside of my barn or waggon house under any circumstances.

When Plymouth Rocks came into prominence I sent to Massachusetts and got a pair of high up, pure blood, registered Rocks. These I kept one year and got perfectly sick of them, as the egg production was not what I expected, and the meat was tough and beefy. But I know now where I failed.

Eggs are what the farmers want of poultry. If an amateur wants information along these lines he naturally turns to the poultry paper editor, but how often he gets disappointed! Many an ignorant beginner has sought for light where he was led to expect light, and got it not; dropped the musket and deserted the army, when a few words of counsel and advice would have made him a good fighter.

You must have bones to cut to make the bone cutter of use, and many farmers are not so situated that they can obtain them; to such the commercial crushed bones, or meat, are more advantageous. I pound up with a stone sledge all I can get, and the hens relish it much. As to vegetable cutters, the farmer who keeps only a few hens does not feel like putting out cash for a hand cutter. But do not deprive your hens of chopped vegetables. Take a common hand hoe to the blacksmith, and have him rap it out of the handle and straighten it out perfectly straight and put it back into the handle, and sharpen the edge if it needs it. Take an old butter tub or a wooden pail and put in your vegetables to be chopped. Chop your cutter around the sides of the tub, and you will be surprised how quickly you can reduce any kind of vegetable to a fine feed fit to mix with your hot mash.

Also for chopping clover. Take good, clean clover, all you can grasp tightly in the left hand, sweep away a clean place on the floor, and with a square-bitted hand axe chop off the cuts as short as you want, and as near the hand as you dare and be safe, and in two minutes you can chop a pailful of nice, fine clover. I feed one day chopped vegetables and the next day chopped clover in my hot mash.

Some have trouble with hens eating their eggs in cold weather. Poultry papers tell us if hens are fed a proper ration they will not eat their eggs. Admitting this, how many common farmers can or will go to the trouble to feed their hens a proper ration. And those who will not feed a scientific ration to hens I am advising.

Take a boot or shoe box at least twenty inches deep, make a partition in it large enough for your hen's nests; for big hens twelve inches square, for smaller hens ten inches square, will be big enough. Cut a round hole at the top six or seven inches in diameter, according to the size of your hen; nail the top on tight, stop all cracks where light can come in, put a step on the outside low enough so the hen can stand on it and look in and see the eggs, but not so she can reach them with her bill, and when she hops into the hole the nest will be dark, and if she drops into the nest it is not so large that she can reach the egg. She will fly out and off, and go to work and forget the egg, and you have saved it for your own use. The hen must needs stand on something in order to peck the egg. These boxes I nail up around the henhouse about two feet from the floor. Some farmers let the hens roost on poles at different heights, but nests want to be all on a level. Put a floor of poles or loose boards about three feet above the roost and cover with straw, and you will not have frosted combs if your house is anywhere reasonably warm, even if the air on the floor is below freezing.

If these thoughts are of value, and more are wanted I will be glad to benefit my fellow-farmers. I write of what I know, and have tried.—D. Dole, New Idea Poultry Yard, Ellenburg Centre, N.Y.

His Estimate of Cromwell.

Lieut.-General Sir William Butler recently lectured to the Irish Literary Society on "The Cromwellian war in Ireland." After a sketch of the famous campaign couched in the severest terms, Sir William proceeded to express his view of Cromwell. His appreciation, marked as it is by an enviable power of expression, is as follows :— For some 50 or 60 years, he said, it had been the fashion of the time to speak of Cromwell as one of the greatest of men. For quite 200 years before our time not one historian, not one writer of any eminence, had had anything good to say about him. But we had changed all that. His eulogizers could now be counted by the thousand, his admirers by the million. He had already quoted a letter, written by Cromwell some years before he became famous, in which he said, "Who goeth to war at his own cost?" That was the keynote of Cromwell's character. The two chief objects of his effort were plunder and persecution. He and his were the saints; they were to possess the earth. All the rest were sinners; they were to be despoiled, cast out, persecuted. Who could count the oaths taken by him and broken by him? He swore allegiance to the King, but he cut his head off. He swore to support the Parliament, but he betrayed it and turned it out of doors. He swore to the Scottish covenant, but he destroyed it. He swore to uphold the liberties and rights of his country, but he trampled upon the one and betrayed the other. Standing in his place in the House of Commons with his hand upon his heart, he swore, in the presence of Almighty God, that he knew the army would disband and lay down their arms at the door of the House whenever the Parliament should command them to do so, and within 24 hours he was in the midst of that army inciting them to fresh defiance of that Parliament. Could any instance of hypocrisy match this—that he had prayed on his knees to God for the life of Charles until his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, by which he saw that God had willed the death of the King? He averred that he was a most upright and conscientious man to his King and he prayed that God would be pleased to look upon him (Cromwell) according to the sincerity of his heart to the King, and at that moment Cromwell had the death of the King planned. He was absolute master of every trick of tongue, gesture, expression by which man could deceive his fellow. He could weep at will, pray, preach, affirm, swear, cajole, belie, act the buffoon with the corporal, play schoolboy tricks while signing the death-warrant of the King, commit the most appalling deeds with the name of God upon his lips and the Bible in his hand. He was the greatest dissembler that history held record of. While raving of liberty he suspended in turn every liberty that Englishmen had ever known—representation in Parliament, trial by jury, taxation with consent, everything that the people had gained and valued. He proposed to sell St. Paul's to the Jews for a synagogue. He sold hundreds of English gentlemen and thousands of Irishmen, women and children to West Indian planters to be slaves. He arrested and locked up in the Tower the three counsel of a London merchant who was prosecuted for having refused to pay taxes which had not been voted by Parliament. When confronted with all this perfidy he fell upon his knees in the House of Commons and took a solemn oath that it was untrue. He was false to his own chosen band of supporters and to the inner circle of his friends; and to each one of those parties whom he deceived in turn he used the same solemn asseverations of rectitude, piling perjury upon perjury such as no age had ever seen before. Did he deceive even himself? That question we could not answer. It was possible that having deceived every one—enemies, friends, comrades—he had come at last to deceive himself. The world held no greater failure in its history than our civil war. The result was that the King lost his head and the Parliament lost every shred of privilege and liberty it had ever possessed. For years Cromwell ruled the land with heavy sword and booted foot. He abolished the House of Lords, and he shut up the Commons. He taxed without representation. He tried without jury. He ruled by martial law. He packed the courts, he arrested counsel, he hanged and beheaded as he pleased. His little finger lay heavier upon the nation, said the people of the time, than the loins of the late King had lain. And then he died, and there came back to a weary and blood-sucked land a King. Cromwell left nothing behind him, no public works, no new system of law, no better policy of land, no clearer conception of justice. "Nothing cried at his funeral," wrote Evelyn, "but the dogs." And that, the dismalest failure of English history, was the man in whose praise to-day histories were imagined and statues inaugurated. Courage, diligence and the most dogged and determined resolution—those things he had to an extraordinary degree. But to what end and at what cost did he use them? It was a cowardly and a base act of the Parliament of 1660 to dig up his remains and hang his mouldering body on the gibbet at Tyburn. It was voted without a dissentient voice in the House of Commons, but history had missed one strange coincidence which resulted from it. They could remember the choice which Cromwell, in the days of his victory, gave the unfortunate Irish :—"Hell or Connaught." He turned to the last page of Cromwell's latest biographer, and this was what he read: "Where Connaught Square now stands, a yard or two beneath the street, trodden under foot and beaten by horses' hoofs, lies the dust of the great Protector." And that was the end.

Grazing does harm to pastures if the cattle are permitted to eat too closely of the grass. Weeds in pastures indicate that damage is being done by cattle, because of the fact that the animals reject the weeds, leaving them to grow and crowd out the grass. When a pasture becomes infested with weed mow them down and keep the stock off until the grass has an opportunity to grow. It may be necessary to re-seed the pasture also, as well as apply fertilizer.

Charcoal is very valuable as an aid to keeping poultry in good order and preventing bowel disorders. It should be fed in powdered form mixed with the food several times a week; it is harmless, whatever amount is given, as it is not really medicinal but acts as an absorbent, taking up the poisonous gases in the system. It is said that chickens will fatten faster if charcoal is given.

HEROES AND HEROINES.

SERMON BY

GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

But he that endureth to the end shall be saved.—St. Matthew, x., 22.

Everybody admires heroism. The qualities of character which hurl one to the forefront in a critical moment, careless of danger, reckless of consequences, claim our unstinted applause.

But in the emergency, when the air vibrates with excitement, a man becomes intoxicated with courage, ordinary soldiers do deeds which would grace a god of Olympus, and the coward is so rare an exception that he becomes invisible. Human nature, when impelled by a strong passion or a noble ambition, surprises itself. The poor village lout has a capacity for endurance and brilliant work which needs only time and incentive to become divine. The rattle of musketry is the stimulus to great achievement. The perilous expedition, with sudden death lurking in ambush, will always find volunteers.

Man is a rude, crude, but grand sort of creature, with the making of an archangel in him. There is a mettle in his soul which has not yet been fully called forth. He is a Toledo blade which the hot fire of circumstance will some time temper. He is nobler than he knows or ever can know until he is forced to show himself by opportunity.

So much for physical heroism. It is generally exhibited in the gaze of the world. There is another kind, however, and a higher kind, which never sees the light of day—the quiet heroism of an obscure life. The majority of our heroes and heroines will be unknown to us until we get to heaven. They are not now walking on hilltops, where they can be observed of all men, but are living quietly and sacrificing patiently in their narrow sphere, waiting for the peace and rest which will come "at eventime." I have known many such, and have never looked into their sad faces without thinking that there is a courage to which that of the battlefield is a trivial circumstance, the courage which endures with resignation and meets inevitable suffering and misfortune with a calmness which is God's best gift.

Here, for example, is a woman who on her wedding day saw nothing but blue sky and sunshine. It seemed as though no shadow could throw itself across her path. A light heart and lips of laughter—nothing more. She did not know her own strength, for she had never been tested. But the avalanche swept down the mountain side and crushed and buried all her hopes. The day was turned to night, and even the stars refused to come out. Sickness, death, poverty followed in logical succession. She was face to face with a hard world, her children crying for bread. The friends of other days had their attention called elsewhere, and they saw her not. Alone in the struggle! And yet she bravely set to work, won her way to a livelihood, walked her lonely path in calm confidence that God still lived, brushed away the tears and grappled with fate. The struggle has told on her, for her hair is grey, and there is a look in her face which comes only from sorrow hard to bear.

You do not know her, or perhaps care to know her, but that life is one long list of heroisms, and when we all get yonder and look back on the past we shall see the path she has travelled, the upward climb of her years, and give her the meed of praise which a thoughtless and ignorant world now refuses. There are no nobler qualities of character than her uncomplaining endurance, her persistent patience and her undimmed faith. The future has crowns for such souls, and God and the angels walk with them on their way to the New Jerusalem.

I know a man who has given his life to an aged parent, and another who has been forbidden for years, shut in from the pleasures which we most prize, and still another whose life has been a long sacrifice for his children, and another who—but why continue the list? I do but remind you of a similar instance within your own knowledge.

To meet such a fate as that requires the sublimest courage, not the courage of despair, but the courage of faith. There are flowers even in such byways as these, joys which cheer the heart and spots of happiness like oases in the desert. It is strange, but the presence of God and the conscious companionship of angels can bring bright days and starry nights. It is not our surroundings, after all, that bring peace, for if peace is in the heart it throws its light over all.

The root and foundation of this heroism is religion. There must be faith that above us and around us are helping and cheering influences, that earth and heaven are within telepathic distance of each other, and that what strength we need will be given us for the asking if we are to meet sorrow and misfortune with quiet fortitude. And the more we realize the presence of God, the easier it is to bear burdens. If we could once catch a glimpse of an angel's face—and some tell me they have done this—we should be light-hearted even in the dark. At any rate, we can have faith that loved ones are near, though invisible, and it helps us as nothing else can.

THE RING

Denver, Colo., May 23 — Unless the well-laid plans of the Denver Athletic Club's slip a cog "Young Corbett" will appear in the arena of that organization to-night to defend the championship title which he won from Terry McGovern last Thanksgiving day. His opponent is to be "Kid" Broad, who has high hopes of defeating the Denverite and thereby winning the championship honors and the liberal purse hung up by the club. As a result of careful training, both men appear in superb trim and fit to fight the battle of their lives. Though the distance is limited to ten rounds a hard and fast contest is expected.

To-night's encounter will be the third meeting between the pair. In the first bout Broad was returned the victor in four rounds, and in the next Corbett won, the contest going the limit, ten rounds.

THE RACE COURSE

Toronto, Ont., May 22 — When the flag fell at Woodbine this afternoon it ushered in what promises to be the banner meeting in the history of the Ontario Jockey Club. The Queen's plate, the oldest turf event in America this year becomes the King's plate, His Majesty King Edward continuing the gift of fifty guineas which Queen Victoria instituted nearly half a century ago. Though the name is changed and there is another donor of the guineas, the conditions of the race are the same, and it certainly has lost none of its attractiveness as is evidenced by the large crowd of visitors here from far and near.

The meeting begun to-day is to continue nine days, during which time $33,000 is to be distributed in prizes. The new races this year are the Coronation stakes, a sweepstakes for Dominion-bred two year olds with $650 added; the Hurlingham cup for polo ponies, the Athol purse for home-bred hunters and the Prince of Wales steeplechase, a new name for the Red Coat race, in which professionals are allowed to ride.

Woodbine Track, May 22.—An enormous crowd turned out to-day to see the King's Plate run. The lawn is one mass of color with brilliantly-clad women, while the betting ring is a seething mass of humanity. The track is very fast. There were seventeen bookmakers doing business in the betting ring, including two one-dollar books.

The King's Plate

Hendrie's "Lyddite" 1st.
Davies, "Opuntia" 3rd.

Merriment was the only horse scratched in the opening race, Light Brigade and Lorina were scratched from the second race, Khaki and Miss Weller in the third, Mayor Gilroy Expelled and Arion in the fourth, Court K. and Cardigan in the King's Plate, Medford in the sixth. Saucy Sally started in the Plate

DUE THIS YEAR.

"I suppose you are aware," remarked the entomologist to the Times yesterday "that the seventeen year locust is due in a week or two. Since 1732 he has visited the United States, but has not caused much trouble in Canada. He came last in 1885, and by June 15th should be here again. Locusts at their worst—we don't get them in America at their worst—fly in such myriads that one observer reported of a certain swarm that, when driven out to sea and drowned, the washed up dead bodies formed a bank 50 miles long and three or four feet high. When such swarms settle in a district all vegetation rapidly disappears. The hungry insects then turn to animal matter for their food, and sometimes they even become cannibals, devouring one another in horrible warfare. In 1869 a swarm flew to England all the way from the west coast of Africa. These insects travel swiftly, at a height of from 40 to 600 feet and they are sometimes so numerous as to obscure the sun, and to deafen the human ears with the dry rustling of their wings is a fact confirmed by a multitude of observers."

How the Cocaine Habit Starts

Generally from using catarrh snuffs and ointments containing this deadly drug. It is well to remember that the only direct scientific cure for catarrh is Catarrhozone, which cures by the inhalation of medicated air. Simply breathe Catarrhozone, and it will cure all forms of catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, lung troubles and deafness. Every breath from Catarrhozone inhaler soothes, heals and relieves. Permanent cure guaranteed even though other remedies failed. Try Catarrhozone, price $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposition to any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter turning from the fountain, she hurried rapidly down the path from whence the sound appeared.

Hetty had gone out some minutes in advance. She stopped short as she entered the rose-garden, seeing a handsome stranger, and Aleck too, with her father. Ah, no doubt Aleck had sent for her to know in advance why she had telegraphed for him so hastily; but she could not tell him then and there, that was evident.

"Come forward, my daughter," said the squire, in a husky voice, seeing her stop short in confusion as her eyes rested on the group.

Hetty advanced quickly to her father's side, linking her arm fondly within his; but the squire drew hastily back, looking at her with a sternness she had never seen on those rugged features before.

"Hetty," he said, in a voice that awed the girl, "you have your dead mother's face— you have her voice. I have loved you well. You would not, I am sure, willfully mislead me; in other words, perjure those lips with a falsehood?"

"Certainly I would not, papa," replied the girl, looking in mystified wonder at the group before her.

"I want you to look in this man's face and tell me— remember your dead mother up in heaven is listening to the answer you give. Tell me, do you know this man?"

The horrible silence that followed those words was intense.

Hetty looked long and earnestly into the handsome, indolent, mocking face.

"It seems to me I have seen him somewhere before, papa; but when or where I cannot just now recollect. It may come to me if I think very hard for a few minutes."

The squire's face had grown livid. Even Aleck, in his excitement, was pale as death with terrible fear. Was Hetty, whom he had always believed to be the purest lily in the garden of girlhood, this scoundrel's wife?

Were his words true? Ah, heaven, if it were true it would break her sister Daisy's heart.

"Look well into his face, girl!" thundered the squire, in a voice that made poor Hetty tremble; "and answer me, do you know him, or do you not?"

Again Hetty raised her troubled eyes to the handsome, dissipated countenance, again scanning it earnestly.

She felt positive she had seen that face, and under peculiar circumstances too; but where— when?

Not a leaf seemed to stir, the terrible excitement was so great.

The squire's heart beat in strangling throbs, and his breath labored in heavy gasps on his lips. What did Hetty's hesitation mean?

Suddenly the girl recollected perfectly. Like a flash it occurred to her that this was the man who had been brought to Briarvale on the night of the garden party, to confront the heiress, Lillian Ruthven, whom he persisted was his bride. Yes, she had been among the throng who had gathered around poor Lillian— while she so bitterly denied it to the would-be bridegroom's face; and she had seen him led away in irons by the officers.

"It is Harold St. John, papa!" she shrieked, "who— who——"

The sentence never was finished; she fell back in his arms in a dead faint.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Daisy's Dilemma.

In a moment the greatest confusion prevailed. Aleck had sprung to raise Hetty, and the old squire, who had stood by silent and motionless, like an image carved in marble, turned them to Harold St. John.

"Will you come back in an hour's time?" he asked, huskily. "I— I— am bewildered— dazed. Give me time to think— to act— to look into this matter."

It was certainly the act of a fiend incarnate to turn away with a mocking bow, but this is what St. John did. This strange mistake, which was to result so fatally, gave him huge amusement— he was delighted to prolong the torture.

When he was quite out of sight the squire turned with a bitter cry to Aleck.

"She is the first to bring disgrace upon an honored name," he cried, pointing to the inanimate form. "My God! who would have believed that she whom I trusted, whom I loved so fondly, had so foul a secret as this buried in her heart?"

"Then you believe it?" asked Aleck, slowly.

"Would to heaven I could doubt it," groaned the squire. "I would give my life to believe it false; but the flash of recognition, and the next instant crying out his name and falling at my feet in a dead faint, carried conviction with it. She knew when she saw him standing there that the whole affair would be revealed."

"I can only hope you are mistaken," said Aleck, earnestly. "I will believe that she is Harold St. John's wife only when I hear it from Hetty's own lips. I will not believe that a quiet, modest, retiring girl like Hetty could learn to love a rascal like St. John."

"The wisest are not proof against love, where the heart is taken captive. The man's bold, black eyes, his curly hair and drooping mustache might have taken any romantic young girl's fancy. Hetty is no wiser than the rest."

The squire would have taken Hetty from Aleck's arms and borne her quickly to the house, but Aleck restrained him.

"We must not attract the attention of the servants and create a commotion. I will take her to the fountain yonder and soon revive her."

But at length Aleck grew frightened, the swoon lasted so long.

"Send for Olive or Daisy," he said, "to come here; it requires the hands of a woman to loosen the clothes and attend her."

"Oh, God!" moaned the old squire, "think of the disgrace of it! How can I face either Olive or Daisy, and tell them what, sooner or later, the whole country will be talking about. The terrible disgrace will stun Olive, and poor little Daisy, who loved Hetty so well, it will kill her."

In the path leading to the rose-garden he met Daisy.

"Papa," she cried, flying to his side, her face white as death, "what is it? I—I——"

Her voice died away in an awful gasp; she could not utter the words that sprung from her terrified heart to her lips.

"Sit down here, Daisy, my child," he said, sinking down on the nearest

Anecdotal.

In one of the Philadelphia colleges a professor of chemistry asked a student the other day: "Now, suppose you were called to a patient who had swallowed a heavy dose of oxalic acid, what would you administer?" "I would administer the sacrament," replied the student, who, by the way, is said to be studying for the ministry, and takes chemistry because it is obligatory.

It is reported that Innocent IV. and Thomas Aquinas were standing together as the bags of treasure were being carried in through the gates of the Lateran. "You see," observed the Pope, with a smile, "the day is past when the Church could say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "Yes, holy father," was the saint's reply, "and the day is past also when the Church could say to the lame man, 'Rise and walk.'"

W. J. Bryan told a good story at his own expense in New York recently: "I spoke during the campaign in a little Illinois town. In front of me sat a man rigidly attentive. He drank in every word I said; I think he had drunk in something else besides. When I finished he came up and wrung my hand. 'Mr. Bryan,' he said, 'you are wonderful, wonderful. You are the first man I ever saw whose back teeth I could see all the time he was speaking.'"

President Roosevelt is fond of telling any story at his own expense. That which he enjoys most is the following: Former Governor Wise had told the President that it was the general opinion, so far as he had heard, that he would go down to posterity as a Washington. The President replied that he was delighted to hear that. "But," added Wise, in a serious manner, "whether it will be as a George or a Booker T. I don't know." The President is said to have laughed so heartily over this that Wise became alarmed.

Dr. Rixey, who for some years was the private physician in the McKinley household, says that when the late President's mother sat down for the first time to a White House dinner what seemed to impress her most was the prodigal supply of cream. She commented on its abundance, and then added: "Well, William, at last I know what they mean when they speak of the Cream of Society." The President laughed. "I admit," said he, "that there seems to be an extravagant array of cream on the table, but you know, mother, we can afford to keep a cow, now."

An amusing story is being told of Sir Henry Howorth, who, besides being the author of many scientific works, has written an elaborate historical book entitled "History of the Mongols." It seems that the other day Sir Henry found himself at a dinner party next to a lady who determinedly talked dogs to him from the soup to the dessert. Rather bored, Sir Henry at last remarked that though his friends somewhat unkindly declared that he could chatter on any subject, he was obliged to own that he was utterly at sea on the topic of dogs. The lady looked astounded. "Why, are you not Sir Henry Howorth? I understood from our host that you were the author of a learned book on Mongrels, and I was so delighted, as I am so interested in all kinds of dogs."

A story is told of a certain English bishop well known for his verbosity who rose to address the House of Lords on a very important occasion. "I will divide my speech under twelve heads," he said, to the discomfort of his audience. The Marquis of Salisbury begged to be allowed to interpose with a little anecdote. "A friend of mine was returning home late one night," he said, "when opposite St. Paul's he saw an intoxicated man trying to ascertain the time on the big clock there. Just then it began to strike and slowly tolled out twelve. The man listened, looked hard at the clock and said, 'Confound you, why couldn't you have said that all at once?'" The bishop heartily joined in the laughter which followed, and took the hint contained in the story.

Dr. John Kerr, the well-known Scottish school inspector, was once faced in a Banffshire manse by this question put to him by the lady of the house on behalf of her inquisitive son. "Mr. Kerr, is it true that the devil goes about like a roaring lion?" "It must be true," he replied, "for it is in the Bible." A shrill voice came from the corner: "Then wha keeps his fire in when he's gaun aboot?" Dr. Kerr also tells an anecdote of a woman who had just lost her husband, and the minister calling to condole with her found her sitting in front of a large bowl of porridge. "Terrible loss, terrible loss," sighed the minister. "Aye," was the reply, "it's a terrible loss to me. I've just been greetin' a' nicht, and as sune as I finish this wee drap porridge, I'm just gaun to begin again."

Lindsay's rate will be 26 mills on the dollar.

—Norwood will observe Victoria Day on Monday.

—The barbers have decided to close at 1 o'clock Saturday.

—Work on the street railway will commence next week.

—Remember that to-morrow is a public holiday and all the stores will be closed.

—This is Empire Day, and it will be observed in many of the schools of the country.

—There is some talk of a big real estate deal involving a block of stores on George street.

—The Times is requested to state that the C.P.R. freight sheds will be closed on Victoria Day.

—The Water Commissioners have handed over a check for $1,060 to the tow for last month's business.

—The Times will be issued to-morrow, but will not appear on Monday, so as to give our employees a holiday on Saturday.

—At the Police Court yesterday, Frank Lafontein was fined $1.50 for throwing a stone through the Chinaman's window at the corner of Simcoe and Aylmer streets.

—Great scarcity of brick is being experienced by our contractors. The new brick won't be ready until July 1, and in the meantime building operations are being greatly impeded.

—Little drops of water,

Complaints have been made to The Times regarding the unsatisfactory way the street watering is done in some localities. The chief kick comes from Aylmer street. The Town Engineer should wake up.

S. O. E. Moonlight

Owing to the weather being unfavorable on the night of the 22nd, it was postponed till Friday night the 23rd. All holding tickets will be good for the same. R. Waram, Chairman; A. Kingscote, Secretary.

Laid at Rest

The remains of the late Richard J. Cavanagh were interred yesterday morning from the Cavanagh House. The funeral was largely attended, showing the high regard in which the deceased was held by his many friends.

The Late Mrs. Chas. Legros

The sad intelligence was received to-day of the death of Mrs. Chas. Legros, town, which took place in Quebec, where she had gone on a visit. Mr. Legros left his wife in Quebec last week, in good health and spirits, and her totally unexpected death will come with a great shock to her many friends here.

Should be Stopped

The habit of scattering paper on the streets should be discontinued. Yesterday a horse tied in front of Hamilton's grocery on Simcoe street became frightened at a sheet of paper that came sailing along in the wind, and tore himself free from his harness. Had it not been for the assistance of some passers-by, he would have dashed into the store. It is positively dangerous to drive through the streets on a windy day.

The Lindsay Fire

Mr. Peter Hamilton returned yesterday from Lindsay, where he was called in connection with the fire. The conflagration originated from a spark which somehow got into a pile of lumber in the rear of Mr. James Hamilton's residence. It spread with wonderful rapidity, and in a few minutes a large area of stables and sheds were ablaze. The terrace owned by Mrs. Connolly, on Peel street, the Hamilton terrace and residence were all consumed as well as a great quantity of lumber belonging to the Hamilton Carriage Works. The loss will run up into the thousands, but the exact amount has not been estimated.

—The Times extends its hearty congratulations to Mr. Charlie Stone, on his success in passing his third year examinations in medicine in Trinity Medical College. Mr. H. A. Anderson also passed and obtained second class honors in his final year examinations, and the following have passed the third year examinations,—Messrs. E. C. Beer C. C. Cragg, J. H. Kidd, W. M. Milburn and T. J. C Tinkle.

Lakefield Picnic

Remember the Lakefield picnic on Victoria Day, May 24th. A fine programme of sports has been arranged, and addresses will be delivered by Mr. D. C. Fraser, M.P., of Guysboro, Nova Scotia, Mr. F. D. Monock, M.P., of Jacques Cartier County, Quebec, Hon. J. R. Stratton, Mr. Jas. Kendrey, M.P., Major Miller, Mr. D. O'Connell and others. A lacrosse match for a silver trophy between teams from the T.A.S. and Y.M.C.A clubs of Peterborough will also be an attraction. Trains leave Peterborough at 8.20 a.m. and 1.30 p.m. Returning leave Lakefield at 4.10 and 7.30. This will afford a first class opportunity of spending a very pleasant day and also give an opportunity for those attending of hearing some of the best speakers in the Dominion.

INDIAN RIVER.

—Read The Times and you will be up to the times.

—Miss Delaney, of Dummer, is visiting with Miss E. Doherty for a few days.

Mr. S. Anglesocy and Miss Fitzgerald of Peterboro', were visiting Maggie O'Grady on Sunday last; also Mr. E. Fitzgerald and Miss F. O'Leary were guest at the same place.

Mr. Joseph O'Leary was visiting Miss F. Marquis, at Mr. T. Garvey's, last Sunday.

—Miss Kate Allen, of Douro, was visiting her aunt Mrs. J. Collins, last week.

The Devlin Bros. have just commence to build a dam at the J. R. bridge, between Douro and Otonabee. The walking boss has given it the title "Fisher Dam" and he has the plan and specifications of the same.

Owing to the high winds of late the village blacksmith has deemed it necessary to make a pair of steel shoes for the littlefellow at S—, for fear he may be blown away in some of the severe gales.

A wonderful story,—Mr. P. O'Grady relates that while travelling through the lumber woods recently, he saw a team of horses draw so hard as to sever their limbs from their bodies. Beat this, if you can!

Among the Oddfellows

This year the Grand Warden, who becomes in turn Deputy Master and Grand Master of Ontario, will be elected by the votes of the Past Grands in their respective lodges at the last regular meeting in May. The Hare-Spence system of voting will be used, by which the vote gives a vote to each candidate, numbering them 1,2,3,4, &c., as his choice may direct. It is important that all Past Grands in good standing be present to cast their vote at Otonabee Lodge on Monday, May 26, and at Peterborough Lodge on Thursday May 29.

Decoration Day has been fixed for June 19. No doubt the general public, in and around Peterborough, will join heartily in making the ceremony a success. All owning plots or graves in the Little Lake Cemetery will no doubt decorate them for that day.

THE BREAKFAST CUP

Can Bring Joy or Trouble

Change in food and drink will sometimes make over even elderly people and restore them to natural health.

A man of 70 writes that at the age of 60 he began to break down and was a partial invalid until '67, when he concluded that coffee was one of the prime causes of his sickness, and began using Postum Food Coffee in its place with Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food and some fruit at his meals.

He says, "Now at the age of 70 I am as strong and hearty as I was at 50. I would not go back to my old mode of living for a hundred thousand dollars."

This man was a pioneer in Illinois in 1837, later on was an early settler in N. Dakota. He requests that his name shall not appear in print. Name given by Postum Co. Battle Creek, Mich.

OUR POSITION AT STAKE

The standing of a constituency and the estimation in which it is held by outsiders, is largely decided by character of its representatives in Parliament and the Legislature. The sitting member is taken as reflecting the degrees of intelligence and public spirit prevailing among those who have selected him to do their business. Considering the varied influences that prevail at election time and the many divers considerations that enter into the choice of the electors this method of judgement may not be exactly fair, but it is inevitable. The principals are judged by the character of their agents, just as the business firm is judged by the appearance and demeanor of the travellers it sends out or others appointed to act for it.

When a member of the House makes a foolish speech or gives an ill-considered vote the remark is often passed.—"What sort of people can the electors be to send a man like that to represent them?" If he displays incapacity or want of tact he is sure to be sat down to the discredit of those he represents. On the other hand, if he be a man of marked ability and displaying the qualities which fit a public man for leadership if his usefulness becomes conspicuous the community rises in the general estimation. He reflects credit on the city or riding which he represents. He gives it a status and importance in the political and business world, which is of material advantage in many ways, the value of which it would be folly to ignore.

Many enterprising cities and towns spend large amounts in advertising their advantages. They circulate literature, and contract at a heavy expense for space in magazines to keep the name of their community prominently before investors and business men. This may be good policy or otherwise, but at least it shows how solicitous the enterprising citizens are to obtain publicity and gain a good name abroad. A capable, energetic representative, who is prominent in public life is an advertisement of the most effective sort. Every mention of his name recalls his constituency. Even if it be a comparatively small or obscure riding it is benefitted and brought into some measure of prominence thereby. But in the case of a busy thriving, growing community like, say Peterborough, having large business transactions and in close touch with the larger centres, the advantage is much greater. It gains an additional weight in Provincial affairs, and enhanced credit and reputation such as have a decided commercial value.

These considerations ought not to be lost sight of in the present election. Mr. Stratton, in addition to being an able and faithful representative has risen to the position of cabinet minister. In this capacity he has shown conspicuous talent for administration by the exercise of the same qualities as he has exhibited in the management of his own affairs. As Provincial Secretary he has evinced a high degree of executive ability and a close attention to his duties which has maintained the Department at a standard of marked efficiency. During the sessions of the Legislature and the work of the campaign Mr. Stratton has taken a prominent and active part in explaining and defending the policy of the Government. In fact no member of the government has shown himself more zealous and energetic in the discharge of his varied duties or more actively interested in promoting in every way the welfare of the constituency he represents.

It is an honor and a credit to any community to be represented by a Cabinet Minister. Apart altogether from the direct practical advantages arising from having a man of influence in the inner circle to urge the claims of the constituency in a far more effective manner than any outsider could do, no matter what his ability, the prestige and standing of the riding is greatly increased by representation in the ministry. The shrewd business men of Peterborough and the public spirited citizens of all classes who are proud of the reputation of the town as one of the most go-ahead thriving and progressive places in Canada will certainly not overlook or rate too lightly this consideration.

To elect Mr. Miller would be to forego the advantages which we possess over rival localities and to throw away one of the most important factors of the growth and prosperity of the riding. There is no complaint that our interests have not been properly looked after. Both the town and the country have reaped the benefit of Mr. Stratton's experience, influence and exertions. They would very soon realize the difference should the electors have the folly and want of interest to commit so important a trust to an untried man, who, as an occupant of the Opposition benches, would not have even the influence possessed by an ordinary member in accord with the government.

The interests at stake are too many and too vital to the future position and prosperity of the riding to be trifled with by surrendering for a caprice or the sake of meaningless party name, the tangible advantages accruing from representation in the Cabinet.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Only four more days of uncertainty.

Vote for Stratton and Peterborough's advancement.

• • • •

Did you ever notice how Mr. Stratton's opponents are blowing these days, to keep themselves warm, we suppose.

• • • •

A town in Cape Colony was attacked by 700 Boers a few days ago, but they were repulsed. If these Boers don't hurry they won't be home in time to vote.

• • • •

If the work they are doing could be estimated by the amount of talking, they do, this campaign would be the greatest ever put up in Peterborough.

• • • •

Martinique is a French island. By the eruption of Mount Pelee, half a million dollars' worth of shipping was destroyed at St. Pierre, thirteen vessels being overwhelmed. More than half the value was British, the rest being Italian, French, American and Norwegian. Every great marine disaster tells of British ubiquity on the sea.

• • • •

Mr. Stratton had an ovation tendered him in the north country. This means a bigger maojrity than ever next Thursday in the North. All of which goes to prove that Stratton is the man for Galway.

• • • •

Some one suggested that the cut which appears in some of our exchanges of Major Miller would have looked much better had the gallant officer had his whiskers trimmed before he sat for that picture. Never mind, he will have his whiskers trimmed next Thursday.

• • • •

A writer in a Boston paper, the Christian Register, says: "The native American is disappearing off the face of the earth. For every 2,000,000 American parents there are now only 1,800,000 children, a loss of 200,000 in a generation, while the foreigners among us produce, as our unemancipated great-grandmother did, 4,500,000 children for every 2,000,000 parents. That is, where we lose 200,000 in a generation, the foreigner gains 2,500,000." The same writer further says that "statistics show that the proportion of children to mothers who are graduates of female colleges is but 1.3; that is, for every 2,000 parents there are but 1,500 children." This low rate, and the low rate existing for native American parents generally, he attributes in part to a too strenuous life, and in part to Preventive measures of a more or less culpable nature. He thinks that American people are not joyous enough, and contrasts them in that respect with the Italians, amongst whom "everything—church services, literature, music, social life, the all-pervading joyousness—tends to enlarge the emotional nature," with the result that the streets are overflowing with children, poor but happy. There is something here for pure-blooded Americans to think about, and perhaps for other people as well.

THE TEST OF DISCUSSION

As the campaign approaches its culmination and the questions before the electors are thoroughly threshed out, from the government point of view, the strength of the position occupied by the ministry and the weakness of the Opposition becomes more and more apparent. The appeals made by the leading men on both sides, and the keenness of the discussion in the press, have done much to place the matter in a clear light before the public and to sweep away many misconceptions and false issues.

The pretensions of the Opposition to superior purity and political morality have been fully exposed. Mr. Whitney's assumed horror at the offences comitted by some over-zealous Liberal partizans, and his attempts to implicate ministers and men of responsible positions in these misdeeds, have been shown to be thoroughly insincere and hypocritical, in view of his own close political affiliations with proved corruptionists and the readiness which he has evinced to condone such offences by members of his own party. It surely does not lie in the mouth of the platform associate of Charles Calder to condemn bribbery and electoral corruption in unmeasured terms, while gladly accepting the assistance of the most hardened political profligates?

The more the administration policy of industrial expansion and provincial development has been assailed and the more closely its details are scrutinized, the greater its merits appear. It does not follow that it is by any means perfect or could not be improved in some respects. As to the precise methods to be followed in such an undertaking, ther will always be room for honest differences of opinion. As has been truly said in relation to political movements, "There are many ways of going forward, but only one way of standing still." There is always plenty of opportunity to criticize and find fault with any great work. If Mr. Ross and his colleagues had been satisfied to plod along in the old ruts there would have been far fewer opportunities to assail them. It is not easy to find many points of attack in a do-nothing policy. But we much mistake the spirit and temper of the Ontario voters if they do not prefer a programme of action and enterprise, even at the risk of making some mistakes, to a policy of supineness and inaction

All the carpings and criticisms of Mr. Whitney and the opposition fall upon deaf ears when addressed to those who are personally experiencing the beneficial results which have been brought about by the measures they condemn. The least intelligent of the electors is able to appreciate the argument of the full dinner pail. It is useless telling men, who are doing more business, making more money or drawing higher and more steady wages than ever before, that the country is suffering from the incapacity and extravagance of the government. The proofs to the contrary come home in almost convincing manner.

The course of political controversy has emphasized the want of any comprehensive symmetrical and well thought-out policy on the part of the Opposition. Not only do their leaders disagree among themselves, but the utterances of Mr. Whitney are of the most self-contradictory character. At Sault Ste. Marie he retracted his former condemnation of the Algoma Central Railway grant, which he characterized in the House as a phenomenal steal. When confronted with his statement that he would repeal the Provincial tax on corporations he shifts his ground and repudiates any intention of interfering with the measure for the introduction of which he has so fiercely assailed the government. His promise to allow the settlers on crown lands to appropriate the pine—which in many cases would be equivalent to a free gift of several thousand dollars worth of public property—is such an unblushing attempt at bribery by wholesale as deserves the strongest condemnation. It is of a piece with his offering the people near the Niagara Falls the use of the water power "free as air." In fact Mr. Whitney's speeches show that he simply says whatever he thinks will be pleasing and effective with the audience he happens to be addressing without a thought of consistency or the responsibility entailed by his utterances. This is a great defect in the character of a political leader and one which would certainly prevent him from successfully managing the affairs of the Province. Such tactics might have been resorted to with impunity in former days when the means of communication between different localities were few but the efficient service of the newspaper press of today soon exposes such double-dealing. In resorting to these artifices Mr. Whitney has shown himself woefully deficient not merely in honesty but in astuteness, and the people are finding him out. They cannot place any confidence in a man who repudiates or mollifies his utterances so frequently, and varies his policy to suit the people of whatever neighborhood he happens to visit.

The electors want at least to know what they are voting for. They want to be able to form some idea either from the actions or the promises of those who appeal to them what to expect at their hands. In supporting Mr. Ross and his colleagues the voters know what they have done in the past. They are experiencing the good results of their administration. They have before them a clear cut difinite policy to guide their action.

To support Mr. Whitney would be to trust to chance. No one can say what he would do on any given question. Probably he does not know himself. His deliverances have been so contradictory. his position has been shifted so often that no one could reasonably be surprised at any course he might take.

The electors will support the men with a record of 30 years good government behind them, rather than shifty, vacillating leader who does not know his own mind, and is not in harmony with his own followers.

Pulpit Oratory

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—As the columns of The Times are open for the discussion of subjects of importance, I venture to trespass on your space, and would say a word in regard to pulpit oratory. Churches are coming in for a goodly share of notice in the press. We have confident appraisement as to ability, scholarship and spirituality, while from another point of view we have the history of most of the Protestant churches of the town and suburbs. As a matter of fact, while we have a certain kind of preaching power in Peterborough, we lack men of the highest order of eloquence — magnetic men, who thrill the people who listen to an eloquence which never looks upon its foolscap. The Church of England has never given sufficient attention to pulpit eloquence, that church holding that it is the service which is worship, and that mere preaching is an adjunct not of first-class importance. Some modification of this attitude is being sought for, and it is the leading men of the Church of England in England who deplore the lack of pulpit power. What we call the dissenting churches have always given prominence to pulpit oratory. Sometimes it is untutored and turgid; again, it is chaste, classic, full of dignity. Above all, it was in a Punshon, a Spurgeon, a Beecher, to thrill the most careless. I have often urged that theological undergraduates should be taught elocution; should be practised in the art of extempore preaching; should be encouraged to memorize, and should be expected to be able, when they reach the pulpit, to offer, not merely original thought, but grace, a chaste fervor, striking dramatic effects, pathos, humor, and all the features of the orator. For it is the voice and not the dead page that moves. It is the voice that enthralls. And we want, not an essay, academic in form and matter, but something urgent from heart and mind, something which will be remembered, which will influence the life. And therefore we should have the epigram, and the fitting climax, and every grace and power should be employed in the noblest service—that of touching the hearts and imaginations of the people. No doubt praise and prayer are worship, but the power of the churches lies in the living voice, and this voice must not be the voice of dillettantism, but of living power.

May Heaven Help Despondent and Hopeless Sufferers From Kidney Disease to Accept the New Life Offered by Paine's Celery Compound

The Great Medicine Cures Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Nephritis and Albuminuria

Thousands of people suffer through a living death from some form of kidney disease. In the majority of cases, the poor sufferers have been informed by physicians that there is no hope.

If you are a victim of kidney disease, take courage, dear sufferer! There is a mighty saving agent that you have not yet called to your aid; it is Paine's Celery Compound. This grand medical prescription has conquered as desperate cases as yours; it has power to pluck you as a brand from the burning, if you have but the faith to give it a trial.

"You may perchance ask, "What will Paine's Celery Compound do for me, that other medicines have failed to accomplish?"

Paine's Celery Compound will accomplish vastly more for you in your distress than you can imagine. Its first great vital undertaking is the purification of the life stream from waste matter, the result of decomposition of the tissues. It will remove all morbid materials, saving you from uraemic poisoning, which so often proves fatal in kidney disease.

In addition to all this Paine's Celery Compound will establish nerve force and new nerve fibre; it will nourish the weakened system and restore the full vital function of the kidneys.

If you value life, delay not the use of Paine's Celery Compound a single hour. Your present critical condition demands the immediate use of this great life-saver. Mrs. J. Currie, Delaware Ave., Toronto, Ont., says:

"No living mortal can imagine the sufferings I endured for four years owing to kidney troubles, sore back and headaches. I became very downhearted and morose; and though I tried hard to keep up courage, I always felt I would have to give up. I used many kinds of medicines, and was under the treatment of doctors, but obtained no relief of any consequence, and my troubles would come back worse than ever. I thank God for having read of some wonderful cures through Paine's Celery Compound. I at once procured the medicine and used it, and am happy to state I have experienced a great change. No other remedy has ever given me such wonderful results in so short a time. I now feel myself a new woman. I can now sleep well, and am daily gaining in strength."

Items of Interest

London, May 23.—Whatever may be its issue, says the correspondent of the Times at Pretoria, the Boer conference at Cereeniging will be a notable feature in the history of this war. It is a unique experience for every burgher delegate. Some 150 delegates are present, and nearly all of them are prominent Boers. The circumstances of the meeting as well as the journey ought to impress the most unimaginative Boer. The former States Attorney Smuts, and his immediate entourage, alone experienced the novelty of a sea voyage, having been conveyed from Port Nolloth to Cape Town.

For five weeks, says the correspondent, a number of the enemy have been using British lines of communication and accepting British hospitality, but the majority have not manifested any symptoms of being under any obligation. The demeanor of most of the Boers would lead one to suppose their votes will be in favor of continuing hostilities, though the use of the ballot may turn the balance in favor of peace. Whatever may be the decision at the conference, the end of the war is not distant. Probably, in any case there will be surrenders en bloc in many districts, liberating so many troops that the British will be able to pour overwhelming numbers into each district in turn.

Mail advices to the Times from Cape Town, dated April 30, warn the British against a patchwork peace, and summarize the views of loyalists of South Africa, who think peace negotations are a mistake, though full confidence is felt in Lord Milner.

The correspondent says the Boers will probably demand:

First: A fixed date for the establishment of representative government;

Second: Recognition of Dutch as the official language as well as English;

Third: Compensation for war losses;

Fourth: Amnesty for Cape Colony rebels.

The first demand, argues the correspondent, is obviously impossible. The second has already been determined in the negative. As to the third and fourth, the Boers must trust to British generosity. The British need not inexorably inflict the death penalty, but must not shrink from the disfranchisement of rebels.

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter garden bench; "I have heard that today which has nearly unmanned me. Can you bear a great shock?"

"Tell me, papa," she said. "I can face even death!"

In a choking voice the squire told her very minutely all that had happened.

"I was just coming in search of either you or Olive to go and attend her," he concluded. "In an hour's time Harold St. John will return, and then —— Ah, me, I dare not think what will happen then."

"Send Aleck away, papa," Daisy sobbed. "I —I cannot look upon his face now. Then I will go to Hetty; I will see her all alone."

"My poor child, do not take on so," said the squire. "I feel the disgrace as keenly as you do; but Aleck will think no less of you for Hetty's folly. We must thank heaven there was a marriage. Such a scoundrel was capable of anything."

But she only clung to him, trembling like an aspen leaf, and the squire forgot his own anguish in trying to comfort her.

The squire had gone to fulfill her request, and wondering much at Daisy's desire that he should go to the house without seeing her, and leave her alone with Hetty, Aleck turned away.

With bitter sobs, now that she was alone with Hetty, Daisy flung herself down beside her sister's inanimate form.

"I must tell Hetty all," she moaned, "and then I will creep away and die like some poor thing wounded unto death."

All in vain she laved the death-white face, but the white eyelids never quivered.

She placed her hand quickly over her heart, she could hear it beating faintly in measured strokes.

"You must revive, Hetty," she moaned; "I must make my confession to you before Harold St. John returns."

As if in response to that wild, piteous appeal, a low sigh quivered over Hetty Gordon's lips, and the dark eyes opened slowly and gazed up in bewilderment at the white, terrified face bending over her.

She sprang to her feet in astonishment.

"What is the matter, Daisy?" she cried; "why am I here? Oh, I remember now, I came upon papa and Aleck in the garden —a stranger was with them —and papa turned to me and asked me if I had ever seen the stranger before.

"At first I thought not — though there was a dim recollection in my mind of just such a dark, handsome evil face —then like a flash it came to me—I had seen him before.

"Do you remember the villain who has caused Lillian Ruthven all that trouble, Daisy? well, it was he. I recoiled with a low cry as I told papa who he was, and that scene in which I had beheld him rushed before my mind's eye.

"I could see him just as I saw him that first and last time — handcuffed, standing between two officers — boldly asserting he had just wedded and that his bride was there — he wanted to say farewell to her, for it would be long years before their honeymoon would be apt to be realised.

"When I saw him again today standing before me so impudently, I fainted with actual horror and dismay. What was that man doing here, Daisy?" she asked curiously; "have you heard? — papa seemed greatly agitated, I thought."

CHAPTER XL.

"To Live or Die as Heaven saw Fit."

The answer died away unuttered in Daisy's throat.

"Yes, I know," moaned Daisy, falling on her knees at Hetty's feet; "it was to blast my life; to ruin me, Hetty; for, as you have always suspected, there is a secret in my life which even you have never yet discovered. This man knows it, and he came here to trade on it. It was that which drove me to the verge of madness, so that I tried to kill myself last night, for I knew he was coming here today."

"I do not understand, dear!" Hetty cried; "tell me about it. It cannot be anything so very terrible, I am sure. Make a confidante of me, and we will go together to this man and laugh in his face, telling him we are perfectly indifferent about the matter."

But Daisy drew back.

"When you know all you will hate me, Hetty," she moaned; "you would not let the skirts of your dress even touch me."

"What nonsense!" cried Hetty. "I really think you are hysterical, my dear, from nervousness, and are simply imagining all sorts of impossible things."

"He is coming back within an hour," moaned Daisy. "Then you would know all, anyhow; it would be best to —to —to —tell you myself —if I can."

Then she poured forth into Hetty's astonished ear that Harold St. John had said he came there to claim his wife —for it was not Lillian Ruthven whom he had wedded that fatal night, but one of the Gordon girls —how Olive had been sent for, and the result, and how she —Hetty — had next been called to face the man and, when she had fainted, the squire had believed she was his wife.

A hearty laugh broke from Hetty's lips.

"What a ludicrous mistake!" she cried. "I can understand how papa was misled; let us go at once and undeceive him."

Still Daisy's slender figure shrunk lower and lower, the golden head was bowed until the white face touched the greensward at Hetty's feet.

"Pity me— promise you will pity and not curse me, Hetty, and I will tell you all!" she moaned. "I will keep nothing from you!"

For Duck-Keepers.

The largest duck farm in America is located at Speonk, Long Island. Last year over 35,000 ducklings were hatched. Nearly every pound of the flesh was marketed in New York City.

Ducklings for Profit.

Ducklings are wonderfully hardy, and the death rate, even when large quantities are reared, is very slight when the duck raiser knows his business. They must, of course, be kept dry and sheltered from rain, and if their sleeping house is draughty they may get a touch of roup. This shows itself by a froth collecting round the eye, and can easily be got rid of with a little care, and taking precaution to prevent their sleeping in a draught. They fatten not only easily but quickly. In one big duck-rearing establishment no ducklings are kept over eight weeks old, but generally they are fattened for a fortnight longer.

During the last week of incubation the eggs need to be damped, as a rule, two or three times; in incubators they require rather more moisture than hens' eggs, and makers give instructions on the subject. When the stock ducks have their liberty and are strong, healthy birds, the eggs hatch well, and the twenty-ninth morning sees all the ducklings out that are coming. Like chickens, they need no food for twenty-four hours, but just sleep. By the expiration of that time they are thoroughly dried, and their abundant fluff no longer sticks to their skins, but stands out, making them look much larger than they did when first hatched. They are now ready for their first meal, which should consist of hard-boiled egg and breadcrumbs, damped with skim milk or water, given moister than to chickens; the food should be dropped on their backs; they huddle together in a heap when first collected for feeding, and, seeing the food, they peck at it readily enough.

A pan of water should be put down by them, and to let them see it, a few grains of coarse oatmeal should be dropped upon it. Then they peck at the oatmeal, find the water, and drink. It is necessary that at each meal they should have all the water they want, and they want a great deal, for they are thirsty creatures. Pure, fresh water, and plenty of it, is very necessary for successful duck-raising. The water should be supplied in shallow pans at first; as they get bigger it can be given in larger pans or troughs, but they should not have access to a pond. When they have never had the opportunity of swimming they do not pine for it, but if once they get the chance of swimming they fret for access to it.

For the first two or three days nothing should be given but the hard-boiled egg and breadcrumbs, or oatmeal may be substituted. The eggs should be passed through a sieve, the unfertile ones removed on the eighth day of incubation should be reserved for this purpose. They should be fed very frequently—every two hours, at least. It is a good plan, as in the case of goslings, to give them a little tender chopped grass mixed in with their food, but they are not large eaters of green foods, as goslings are. After the first three days the egg food can be dropped, though if there are unfertile eggs this feeding can with advantage be continued a little longer. Biscuit meal, scalded, is an excellent food for ducklings, and can be made the chief article of diet from a week to a month old. Boiled rice is also largely used by some breeders; others rely entirely on biscuit meal and ground meals. The rice should be thus prepared: To one quart of rice add six quarts of water, and let it simmer till the water is all absorbed. A little fat or greaves can be added. On rice thus boiled, biscuit meal and various ground meals, the ducklings can be quickly forced to maturity; meat and fat are also given more or less, and it hastens them on. The meals used are ground oats or oatmeal, maize meal and pollard.

After the first week the meals can be reduced to four a day, giving them all they will eat at a time, but permitting no food to lie by them between meals. The four can be reduced to three when they are seven or eight weeks old. Most fatteners have their own system, and differ in details of management, the object, in all cases, being to keep the ducklings in good health and appetite, so that they eat well, for the more they eat the better they grow. There are certain adjuncts that must be supplied if they are to keep in first-rate condition under the somewhat artificial mantion under the somewhat artificial manner of treatment they receive, and these are plenty of grit, a supply of green food, and strict cleanliness. For bedding them, peat moss can be highly recommended, and, failing it, straw, but straw is getting scarcer than it was. The peat moss, too, when it is finished with, will be a valuable manure for either the field or garden. Later in the season they can sleep on the ground without ill-effect, but not before it is dry.

It is very needful to protect the ducklings from rats, as they highly prefer them to chickens. They must be well netted in at night, and a few traps set near, for rats are sure to be attracted to the vicinity when ducklings are bred for market. It is also necessary to shelter them from the sun, as they get sunstroke very easily if exposed to it, but, of course, this means the July and August sun, when it is really hot.

In case of their going off their appetites when fattening a meal should be missed for a day or two, and the food changed. This will bring back their appetites. A little spice may with advantage be given at this time. Those ducklings intended for stock should be picked out at four or five weeks old, and have more liberty and a certain proportion of corn. Ducklings for table are fed entirely on soft food. They can have a swim just before being killed, as this washes their plumage.—Farm and Stockbreeder.

Hostess (to guests, who have to spend a few days)—We're so glad you've been able to come, Miss Gushington; but I do hope we are going to have better weather, or I am afraid you won't enjoy yourselves much.

Miss Gushington—Oh, but, my dear Lady Boreham, we didn't come here to enjoy ourselves. We came to see you.—London Punch.

A Real Help.

The Woman's Aid Society in New York has done great work in helping the poor. Like all charitable organizations, it has to contend with ingratitude, stupidity, and wilful improvidence. The "Commercial Advertiser" relates one instance that is amusing to read of, but must have been a trifle discouraging to the society.

To a poor woman whose husband was in jail they gave some clothing and ten dollars in money, thinking that she would know best what she wanted, and so spend the money more wisely than they.

A week after the gift had been made a deputation of members called at the squalid home to see the results of their assistance. They found no improvement in the condition of the family.

"Well, Mrs. Nolan," asked one of them, "how are you getting along?"

"Fine," said Mrs. Nolan.

"Did the clothes fit, and did you find a use for the money?"

"Sure, the clothes fitted fine, an' the childer looked so nice I had all their pictures took wid the money ye gave me, an' I'm going to have me own took this week to send to the old folks in Ireland."

Delivery is to be effected in a manner satisfactory to the Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities.

And the said Inspectors may require additional amounts, not exceeding 20 per cent. of the quantities hereinbefore specified, for the above mentioned institutions to be delivered thereat at the contract prices at any time up to the 15th day of July, 1903.

Tenders will be received for the whole quantity above specified or for the quantities required in each institution. An accepted check for $500, payable to the order of the Hon. the Provincial Secretary, must be furnished by each tenderer as a guarantee of his bona fides, and two sufficient sureties will be required for the due fulfilment of each contract. Specifications and forms and conditions of tenders may be obtained from the Inspectors of Prisons and Public Charities, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, or from the Bursars of the respective institutions. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the Department will not be paid for it.

J. R. STRATTON,
Provincial Secretary.

Parliament Buildings, Toronto, May 12, 1902.

For Farmers.

In an experiment conducted in Staffordshire, England, to test the relative value of different root crops for sheep feeding, the results were as follows:—(1) Globe mangels; (2) kohl rabi; (3) Long Red mangels; (4) Tankard mangels; (5) Swedes.

Sir Walter Gilbey considers it "an alarming fact" that American and Canadian breeders are now going to France and Germany to buy their breeding stock. We cannot afford to lose patronage for our studs from abroad, and the whole question deserves the consideration of horse-breeding societies.—Farmer and Stockbreeder.

Currant bushes should be sprayed with white hellebore in order to destroy the currant worm. As hellebore is a poison some growers object to it. It is claimed that if wood ashes are dusted over the bushes, first spraying with cold water, the worms will be destroyed. It is at least a harmless remedy and is worthy a test trial by those having currant bushes.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., has issued a statement that there is no such thing as manufactured comb honey. Geo. W. York, President of the Chicago Beekeepers' Association, says:—"The truth is that, when you find honey in the comb, you may be absolutely certain that the bees, not man, put it there. It may vary in color; it may vary in quality; all flowers do not yield the same honey; but it was all stored by the bees."

An acre of grass land, according to experiments, gives off not less than 6,400 quarts of water in twenty-four hours, and an acre of sunflowers would give a relatively greater quantity. In fact, swamps have been reclaimed and malarial marshes rendered inocuous by planting sunflowers or eucalyptus trees, which are great pumpers of water, and also exert other influences counteracting baneful conditions of air, earth and water.

Sheep on the Farm.

A correspondent of The Ohio Farmer gives some of the reasons why sheep are a fine thing for the farmer to raise. They pay for their raising in profitable fleeces. They are easily transferred from one inclosure to another and restrained by fences that would not hold cattle or pigs. Their light tread and their dislike to mud warrant their access to fields where the trampling of cattle and tearing of hogs would not be tolerated. They waste less food in proportion to the quantity consumed than any other animal, and will hunt out and utilize much that would otherwise be lost. They work for a living by keeping the farm clean from weeds. No animal returns more fertility to the soil in proportion to the amount exacted for its support. They produce a pound of mutton cheaper than a hog will a pound of pork.—Southwestern Stockman.

Tobacco Stem and Dust.

The waste material from the cigar factories is a good fertilizer, containing both nitrogen and potash, but it has so many other valuable qualities that the farmer and gardener should not fail to obtain some every year. Placed around the squash vines in the hill, it almost surely drives away the fly which is the mother of the borer, and scattered along the onion rows it serves the same purpose for the little black fly that causes the onion maggot. In fact, nearly, if not quite all the insects which damaged our plants and trees by laying an egg of which the larva will be a borer, and thus cannot be reached by poisonous sprays, will be repelled by the use of tobacco stems or dust around the stem of the plant. The claim has been made that the borers that infest our apple and peach orchards can be driven away by winding tobacco leaves around the trunk of the tree, just above where the borers usually enter them. When this is wet the juice that runs down not only makes it unpleasant for the fly to stay there, but if she deposits a few eggs when the tree is dry, the first wet day is likely to send down a decoction strong enough to destroy the vitality of the eggs or kill the young larvae. We do not claim it to be sure, in all of these cases, as something will depend on the weather, but with frequent showers to keep it wet, it will greatly reduce the trouble from these insect pests.—American Cultivator.

The Horse's System.

It may be of use to call attention to the fact that the digestive system of horses differs a great deal from that of our domesticated ruminants—viz., cattle and sheep; whereas the latter are able to consume a large amount of food at one time, the horse—owing to the comparatively small size of its stomach and intestines—is able to consume only a small quantity of food at one meal. In saying comparative size of the horse's stomach and intestines, this refers to the comparison with the stomach of ruminants; as compared with the stomach and intestines of carnivorous animals—such as the dog—the stomach of the horse is large. I have already mentioned the fact that cattle and sheep are able to digest fibre much better and make much better use of it than horses. Besides this difference, there is another important point in which the mode of feeding the former differs from that of the latter. Whereas cattle and sheep are able to live and do comparatively well on poor and bulky foods, such as straw or roots, horses cannot deal satisfactorily with large quantities of these, even when doing no work; they cannot, like cattle, draw the amount of nourishment they require from poor foods by consuming large quantities of them. In their case, the necessary amount of food material must be provided in a more concentrated form. It is in these two points that the chief difference lies in the feeding of horses, as compared with that of cattle and sheep. There is, however, a third point—namely, that in feeding horses we wish to produce work; whereas in feeding cattle, sheep, or pigs we have in view the production of flesh, fat, milk, or wool.

RUSSIA TO FASTEN HER GRIP ON CHINA

The Great Anglo-Chinese Compact May Lead to Grave Complications

TO HOLD ON TO MANCHURIA PROVINCE

Pekin, May 23.—A second railway agreement which Sir Ernest Satow, the British Minister to China, and Yuan Shai Kai, Director General of the Perkin-Shan Hai Kwan Railway, signed the same day the agreement restoring the Pekin-Shan Hai Kwan line was made, and which the parties thitherto attempted to keep secret has become known among the diplomats here, and is arousing opposition among the powers interested in the railway project.

The preamble of this second agreement declares it to be for the benefit of the revenues and in the interests of the bondholders of the Pekin-Shan Hai Kwan Railroad. The clauses of the agreement explaining antagonism provide that all railroads hereinafter constructed within eighty miles of any point of the existing line shall be constructed by the administration of the northern railroads, and shall not be controlled by any foreign Power. The lines between Feng Te and the Great Wall, Tien Tsin and Pao Ting Fu, Ching Wang Tao and Tung Chao are specifically mentioned. Russia regards the extension of the railroad from Pekin to the Great Wall as within her sphere.

American and French projects for railroads between Tein Tsin and Pao Ting Fu are being pressed, and a German syndicate, which has a concession for a railroad from Shang Tung province to Tien Tsin, desires to extend its line from Tien Tsin to Taku, or to some other port. These and other plans will be checkmated if the second agreement referred to between Sir Ernest Satow and Yuan Shai Kai, is enforced.

Paul Lessar, the Russian Minister here has protested to the Chinese authorities and reproached them for signing a com-pact without consulting Russia. Other foreign Ministers here are communicating with their governments.

The Russians declare they will not evacuate Manchuria or restore that railroad to the Chinese if Great Britain persists in what they term "attempts to control the railroad of Northern China.

Friendly observers regard Great Britain's railroad agreements as a serious diplomatic blunder. Before they were signed, it is said, there was no apparent obstacle that Russia could urge for failing to fulfill the Manchuria convention. Now the Russian diplomats frankly say these railroad agreements furnish obstacles such as were contemplated by the stipulation in the Manchurian convention, that Russia would evacuate if no other Powers interposed obstacles.

The latest reports from official observers in Manchuria are to the effect that Russia is steadily taking steps which signify that she proposes a permanent occupation. Many observers believe that Russia never intended to relinquish Manchuria and that she now welcomes such a pretext not to do so as Great Britain has furnished, Great Britain a co-Director of the rail-

The first railroad agreement giving road, with the German and Japanese sub. Directors, pleased no one, and Germany and Japan were not consulted regarding it. The Russian contention is that Great Britain framed the agreement for restoring the Pekin Shan Hai Kwan Railroad to the Chinese in such terms that they knew the other Powers, whose written consent as stipulated in the agreement, must be obtained thereto before it would become valid, would not consent, thereby expecting to continue its exclusive control and operation of the road.

For Great Britain to abandon its ass ng agreement means loss of prestige; to insist upon it means grave complications in the Manchurian question.

A DUTCH REPUBLIC WILL FOLLOW QUEEN

A Belief that the Present Queen is the Last to Rule

Will Fight Against Germany with All Her Might

Special to The Times.

London, May 23.—There is a growing belief that Queen Wilhelmina's reign will be the end of the Dutch dynasty, and that it is very likely that a revival of the Dutch republic will follow the death of the ng Queen of Holland, should she fail to produce an heir to the throne, there are two German Princes in the line of succession, and the powers of Europe would surely resist any attempt to make Holland the north sea coast province of the ambitious German empire, which is simply attaining a maritime power that is alarming the other Governments of the world. France, Russia, England and Austria would surely resist any attempt of Germany to secure the dominating influence in Holland; and the United States would regard with extreme disfavor the Germanizing of the Dutch posts on the north coast of South America, and the establishment of German naval depots to command the approaches to the Isthmian canal, or to menace our possessions in the West Indies.

It is pointed out by the New York Press that the Dutch themselves would resist the encroachments of the Germans, whom they hate and fear, and whom they would resist as their ancestors resisted Duke Alva: and the Press adds:

At the close of the Franco-Prussian war, when the Berlin newspapers intimated that unless the Netherlands did so and so the Uhlans would be seen riding through the streets of The Hague, a cartoon was issued and circulated all over Holland representing the Uhlans in the Netherlands, but the dikes down and the country flooded with water to a height of four inches above the top of the spiked helmet on the tallest Prussian. And that is still the Dutch spirit. If Wilhelmina dies without issue the direct line of the illustrious house of Orange-Nassau, the history of which is also the history of so much of Holland's greatness "in all things in which a little nation can be great," comes to an end. But there are left to the Dutch the memories and traditions of their glorious republic, which upon the failure of the royal line, it would seem only natural they they should seek to re-establish.

THE QUIRK MURDER CASE

A Startling Denouement is Expected at Any Day Now

Brantford, May 23. — Reports from Brantford say there is nothing new in connection with the Quirk murder case, although the police say that the case has not been dropped and that action will be taken when the proper time comes. They are perfectly satisfied with the progress that has been made.

Though nothing apparently seems to be going on in connection with the case, The Times is informed that the antecedents of a suspect are being carefully looked into, and it is the opinion of those who know the ins and outs of the case that there will be a startling denouncement in the case almost any day now.

TWO MORE CANADIANS BACK FROM THE WAR

Regard Peace Conference As a Very "Slim" Boer Trick

THEY SAW VERY SEVERE SERVICE

And Think That South Africa Will Fill Up Rapidly When Peace is Declared

Washington, May 23.—The activity of European exploitation in Africa and the desperation with which the various countries have obtained a foothold there hang on to their possessions, in spite of obstacles, and regardless of the question of profitable occupation, is undoubtedly due in some measure to the fact that exploiting countries are cut off from the acquisition of any additional territory in the Western Hemisphere by Uncle Sam's Monroe Doctrine, and from the hope of ever doing any real estate business of a profitable character in Asia by the jealousies and watchfulness of the great powers. In Africa alone can the land-hunger of the so-called civilized nations stand any chance of appeasement, and there the picking is already very poor for the nations not already on the ground.

A bulletin on Commercial Africa in 1901, issued by the treasury bureau of statistics at Washington, gives some interesting information in respect to foreign occupation of the dark continent. It appears that seven European nations now control African territory, two of them having areas equal, in each case, to about the entire land area of the United States. Beginning at the northeast coast, we find that Egypt and Tripoli are nominally tributary to Turkey, but England's financial guidance is recognized in Egypt, and it may be said, without any great strain upon the truth, that the ancient land of the Pharaohs, together with the Soudan, is practically a British possession. Next, west, Algeria is French. Morocco, on the extreme northwest, is an independent government. Next on the south is Spain's territory, Rio de Oro. Then comes the Senegal territories, belonging to the French, and connecting through the Sahara desert with Algeria, which also belongs to France. Next come a group of small divisions along the Gulf of Guinea, controlled by England: then Liberia, the black republic; Togoland, controlled by the Germans; Dohomy, a French protectorate; the Niger territory, one-third the size of the United States, controlled by England; Kamerum, controlled by Germany; French Congo; then the Congo free state, under the auspices of the king of Belgium; then Portugese Anglo; next German Southwest Africa; and finally, in the march down the Atlantic side, Cape Colony, British. Following up the eastern sides comes the British colony of Natal; west and north, the Orange Free State and Transvaal; next, on the coast, Portugese East Africa; and west of this the great territory known as Rhodesia; then German Africa, which extends almost to the equator; and north of these British East Africa, fronting on the Indian ocean, and merging northwardly with the Soudan. Next north upon the coast, we find Italian territory. A small tract opposite the entrance to the Red Sea is controlled by England; and a few hundred miles west of the entrance to the Red Sea is the independent kingdom of Abyssinia.

Is not the African situation, with such varied occupation, charged with dynamite? What will happen if the exploiting nations ever get to fighting over the division of territory and spoils?

AMERICAN EARTHQUAKES

Seismic Disturbances Which Have Affected the United States

New York, May 24 — Besides the Charleston earthquake of 1886, in which 41 lives were lost and about $5,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. There have been two other notable earthquakes in the United States within historic times—one near the head of the Mississippi delta in 1811-12, and one in the Inyo Valley, Cal., in 1872.

The former, known as the New Madrid earthquake, was remarkable for the length of time which its phenomena covered. There were several shocks at short intervals for several months, and the whole series of shocks lasted about two years.

The country was sparcely settled, and no scientific records of the disturbance were made, but it is related that the aluvial land of the river bottoms was traversed by visible waves, which rocked the trees to and fro and uprooted many. Huge fissures were opened, and lakes were drained by the escape of their waters into them. The largest sunken area is said to have been sixty or eighty miles long and nearly half as broad.

The Inyo Valley earthquake was caused by a renewed movement along the great fault plain at the Eastern base of the Sierra Nevada. The chief shock lasted only a few minutes, but others of less violence continued for two or three months.

A tremendous fissure was opened along the base of the mountain range for about 40 miles. The land west of the fissure rose, and the land east of it fell several feet.

Owens river was temporarily swallowed up. In the village of Inyo all the houses were thrown down and one-tenth of the inhabitants were killed.

Pleasant Cure For Weak Lungs

The best remedy for sore, weak lungs, is the soothing vapor of Catarrhozone, which traverses every air cell and passage of the breathing organs. It treats remote parts that cough mixtures and sprays can't approach, and kills thousands of germs at every breath. Catarrhozone drives away pain, congestion and inflammation; it makes breathing easy and regular, and exerts a marvellous influence on coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, catarrh, deafness and lung trouble. Catarrhozone cures at once, is delightful to inhale, and simple to use. Price $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

EMPIRE DAY IN ASHBURNHAM

Suitable Celebration in the Public Schools of the Village of Ashburnham

On Friday afternoon the pupils of Ashburnham Public School assembled in the Principal's Room, when the following Empire Day programme was rendered,— Chairman's address.

Chorus,—The Maple Leaf.
The Red-Cross Flag.
The Union Jack—Clara Cre[illegible].
Song—The Land of the Maple.
The Greatness of our Heritage— Miss Beattie.
A National Song—Martha Murray.
Siege of Delhi—Elsie Pollock.
Song—Soldiers of the King.
Dominion Day—Flossie Scott.
Address—Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, M.A.
Canada in the Twentieth Century —C. Adams.
Men of the Northern Zone—L. McCubbin.
Song—When Johnny Canuck Comes Home.
God Save The King.

The setting apart of Empire Day, at the suggestion of the Dominion Educational Association, for instilling patriotism of the intelligent kind in the minds of public school pupils seems to be a step in the right direction. Ashburnham is always in line with a proper observance of it.

THE INSURGENT LEADER KILLED HIS FAMILV

Revolt in Chinese Province Grows Mora Serious

Rebels Number 30,000—Their Chief Showed Loyalty by Murdering His Wives and Children

Special to The Times.

St. Petersburg, May 24.—A telegram from Khabarovsk, East Siberia, dated May 18 says the revolt in the southern part of the Chinese province of Chili has become considerably more serious during the last few days, and the greater part of the population is involved.

The insurgents are now estimated to number 30,000 under the leadership of Tsin Nin Pin, a military mandarin who killed his wives and daughters before raising the flag of revolt, in order, one report says, to show his loyalty to the cause, and another report says to prevent their punishment in the event of his failure. It is reported at Khabarovsk that the Chinese regular troops refused to fire on the insurgents.

PRETTY WEDDING.

Nuptials of Mr. W. J. Milne and Miss Ada Blewett.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Tuesday evening, May 22nd, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Rae, Court House, when Miss Ada Blewett, daughter of Mr. Edward Blewett, of Lindsay, and Mr. W. J. Milne, of Chicago, were united in marriage. The bride is one of Peterborough's popular young ladies, having resided here for a number of years. Miss Hattie Barker, of Welland, gracefully performed the duties of bridesmaid and the groom was ably assisted by Mr. Will Higgins, of town. Rev. J. Bastow, of Murray St. Baptist Church, performed the ceremony, at the conclusion of which a dainty dejeuner was partaken of by the guests.

Many handsome and valuable presents were received, testifying to the popularity of the bride and groom. A handsome set of silver knives and forks, was presented by the members of Eko camp, of which the groom was a member. Mr. and Mrs. Milne will reside in Chicago, for which place they left on the 5 p.m. CPR train, carrying with them the sinceres best wishes of a host of friends.

Incontrovertible Chemical Proof is Very Much Stronger than the Oppinions of Ignorant Merchants and Dealers

If a merchant or a dealer tells you that a dye prepared for coloring all-wool goods will successfully color cotton goods, do not believe him. The person who makes such a statement is a stranger to the chemistry of dyes.

Vegetable fibres such as cottons and linens, require special dyes to procure fast, clear and brilliant colors. The manufacturers of Diamond Dyes prepare sixteen special cotton colors in addition to their large range of wool and silk colors. These special cotton colors are immensely popular with carpet, mat and rug makers. Rags, warps, and cotton and linen goods dyed with the Diamond Dye Fast Cotton colors stand sun and washing; these colors never fade or wash out. When you are about to dye cotton, linen or mixed goods, ask your merchant for Fast Diamond Dye Cotton colors; he should have the full range for your convenience.

Thousands of Diamond Dye Mat and rug patterns are sold every week. If you have rags, old pieces of cloth or yarns, you should make up a handsome floor rug. Send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co. Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and you will receive sheets of new designs to choose from.

SIXTY PER CENT WILL DIE

London Paper Likens Martinique to Desert of Sahara

London, May 23 — The correspondent of the Daily Mail at Kingston, Island of St. Vincent, describes in a despatch the conditions on that island. He says that 60 per cent. of the persons injured cannot recover. The whole island resembles a Sahara, and the graves of humans and the remains of animals are seen on every side.

Owing to the difficulty of breathing, the correspondent could not get near to Soufriere. Everywhere on the island the rivers have been stopped by the dust or lava, and in one valley the dust lies sixty feet deep. Most of the deaths on St. Vincent were caused by a blast of heated sulphurous air. The authorities have ascertained, continues the correspondent, that the rumor that another crater had been formed by the eruption of last Monday is untrue.

The sun was obscured all day Monday and the temperature rose to 103 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade. A heavy dust fell that day and terrified the crowds of islanders who were praying along the sea shores.

A Wonderful Tonic and Strengthner

Said a druggist to-day, "No doubt about it, the tonic that gives best results is the biggest seller, and that is Ferrozone. It enriches and purifies the blood, restores strength and energy to the feeble, and is a scientific reconstructor that was always popular. In chlorosis, anaemia, tiredness, langour, brain fag, indigestion and dyspepsia its action is prompt, and permanency cures follow. Yes, I recommend Ferrozone to my customers because I believe it is the best." Boxes cost 50c. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

FORT DE FRANCE WAS BOMBARDED BY PELEE

nhabitants Were in a Fearful State of Terror All Day Yesterday

LARGE CARGOES OF SUPPLIES BEING LAVDE

Scientists Have Arrived—Plans For the Evacuation of Martinique—St. Vincent in Great Danger

Special to The Times.

New York, May 23 — The Herald's Fort de France correspondent says:

Another day of terror and panic has been spent by the people of Martinique. For six hours Fort de France was literally bombarded by Mont Pelee. Stones, many incandescent, rained upon the city from the clouds. Houses were destroyed and fires were started in many quarters. With the stones fell hot mud and ashes. The air was so filled with volcanic dust that it was barely possible to breathe. At this time it seemed as if suffocation must be the fate of all who could not be taken on board the ships.

While the loss of life had not been great, the eruption was far worse than that of May 8. For many hours the explosions were so heavy that it seemed as if the island would be shaken from its foundation. Down upon the ruins of St. Pierre fell great boulders, all red hot, that battered what was left of the unfortunate city beyond all resemblance of its former self. Ashes fell in torrents, and it is reported that the site of the city now resembles a great gray plain.

Thousands have left Fort de France. Some have gone into the mountains, to almost certain starvation, preferring that to the fate that would be theirs if the lava of Mont Pelee buried them in the ruins of the city. Others have gone to nearby islands, there to depend upon the charity of strangers. Every ship in the harbor is constantly crowded with those who would flee at the next appearance of great danger. Clustered about the ships are small boats filled with natives, who beg to be taken up. Hundreds, finding it impossible to obtain boats to take them to the ships, have swam out, risking their lives to avoid the danger which fills them with more terrible dread.

NEW FISSURES

Lieut. McCormick, of the tug Potomac, reports new fissures have formed in the sides of Mont Pelee and from them lava flows in brown streams. All along the shore near St. Pierre the water is boiling, and such curtains of steam rise that the view of the land is possible only when the wind blows with sufficient force to lift them for a few seconds.

St. Pierre is described by Lieutenany McCormick as driven into the earth. About half the city has been buried deeply under the ashes, which constantly fall. The heat from the volcano is great, and the Potomack went so close inshore that she returned with her sides blistered.

On the way back from St. Pierre, Lieut. McCormick saw that a number of men and women on shore were signalling wildly for help. All were taken aboard and brought to Fort de France. Those rescued were almost starved.

From all parts of the island not cut off by the flow of lava, refugees are coming into Fort de France. The mountain roads are filled with panic-stricken and starving natives. Arriving here their terrors do not decrease, and they are as anxious to press on to some safer place as they were to get here. All roads are dotted with dead, and many are reported dying, having fallen from weakness on the way. Liberal wages are offered for rescuers to go out and assist those who have fallen by the way, but laborers are too full of fear to be tempted by any offer.

Supplies are here in plenty for the present, but great suffering has been caused by the lack of water. All the natural water supplies have been polluted with lava, which has developed sulphuric acid. Water is being doled out from the ships, and word has been sent to nearby islands for a greater supply.

Extravagant prices are demanded for transportation. Hundreds have gone, thousands are waiting only for an opportunity to get away.

Two men penetrated the island yesterday far enough to get a glimpse of Mont Pelee from the island. They report that the entire northern half of the island is running with fire. The volcano is in constant convulsions. As clouds of smoke and fire lift, the mountain can be seen throwing out great quantities of lava and hot mud, which is so liquid that it flows like water, and is filling valleys with lakes, from which sickening sulphurous vapors rise.

Fort de France, May 23—The United States steamer Dixie, Captain Perry, from New York, arrived to-day, after a quick and safe passage. Her passengers included many world-famous scientists. Prof. Robert T. Hill, Government geologist; Prof. C. E. Borchgrevink, the Antarctic explorer; Messrs. George Curtis and George Kennan and many magazine writers and correspondents are also among those who arrived on the steamer.

The Dixie began landing her enormous cargo of supplies early, and the storehouses on shore soon became congested. This is the greatest difficulty of the administration.

This morning the United States steamer Potomac, with the commanders of the war vessels now here, went to inspect St. Pierre. With the greatest difficulty the party succeeded in making a landing. The effects of the outburst of yesterday were tremendous. The huge basalt towers of the cathedral were pulverized, and the walls were hurled flat to the earth. The bombardment of volcanic stones is not sufficient to account for this, and all evidence points to the passage of a furious blast of blazing gas, travelling at an enormous speed and with incalculable force. The deposit of boulders, ashes and angular stones is enormous. Not a living human being saw what happened at St. Pierre yesterday morning.

This second eruption was many times more violent than that which effaced St. Pierre, and swept its people from the earth. Nor has all volcanic activity ceased. Vast columns of smoke and gas still pour from the great craters. New fissures have opened on the mountain sides and are vomiting yellow whirlwinds, which rush intermittingly now from one point and now from another. Boiling mud is also thrown out at times in torrents that reach the sea and produce small tidal waves.

From a sombre, silent city of death and desolation, St. Pierre has become a hideous ampitheatre of roaring destruction.

The people are convinced that God is angry with the island and means to scourge it with fire and then sink it in the ocean. Utter and unreasoning fear possesses all souls. Even Fort de France is believed to be unsafe. The presence of the relief ships however, is helpful to the people. The Potomac could not approach close to St. Pierre. The Dixie will sail tomorrow for St. Vincent, but the other vessels will remain here.

Scientists who have arrived will examine into the question of danger of the peaks of Carbet, near Fort de France, becoming active volcanos. The outburst of yesterday probably means a ruined island, as all condidence in time to any extent, as general man-lost.

"We want not food, but only to leave," is the single and unanimous cry of all, rich and poor alike.

A WAR OF REVENGE UPON THE TYRANTS

Russian Officials Who Oppres and Torture Political Prisoners are Slated for Death by a Revolutionary Committee

London, May 23.—An article in the Lemberg newspaper is quoted by the Vienna correspondent of the Times. It states that the man who wounded Gen. Wahl, Governor of Vilna, said he desired to take revenge upon the Governor for cruelties prepetrated on political prisoners under his instructions. The newspaper says there is no doubt the Governor has been condemned to death by a central Russian revolutionary committee, and has received threatening letters to that effect.

Similar letters have been received by the new Minister of the Interior, Von Plehwe. It is declared that the impression produced in St. Petersburg is of great er consequence from the fact that the police prove powerless to cope with such outrages, which are increasing in alarming proportions. The execution of Balschaneff, the assassin of Sipiaguine, has given rise to serious apprehension, fears of revenge being expected.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The hotels will be closed on election day.

—There will be no issue of this paper on Monday.

—The water cart is working overtime during dusty days.

—The local stock exchange on Water street will be open to-day as usual.

—The first advertising car of Sells & Forepaugh's big circus will be here to-day.

—All of the meat markets of the town will be open to-night from 7 to 9.

—The loss by the Lindsay fire amounted to about $25,000, with $15,000 insurance.

—An even bet was made yesterday that Stratton's majority would not be less than 1000.

—The Sons of England will attend the evening service to-morrow at All Saint's in a body.

—The Canadian Order of Foresters will attend divine service in St. Paul's church next Sunday evening, June 1st.

De Wet is now a strong advocate of peace. With thirty-six bottles of whiskey sloshing around somewhere, all any man wants is peace and a Turkish bath.

—Hurrah for Anderson! Hurrah for Ferd! This is even up, and you can take your choice.

—There is no truth in the rumor that J. Peripont Morgan has bought the Trent Valley Canal.

—Owing to the pressure on our advertising columns, a considerable quantity of local news is crowded out of this issue.

—Mr. R. H. Leary has added another very fine team of bays to his already complete livery outfit.

—The steamers Beaver and Water Lily were in port yesterday, bringing about 40 passengers.

—Senator Cox is reported to have said that Peterborough would be a city of 25,000 inhabitants within three or four years.

—Remember the Lakefield picnic today. Trains leave Peterborough at 8.30 a.m. and 1.30 p.m. Returning leave Lakefield at 4.10 and 7.30.

—The two attractions to-day: The big Lakefield picnic and the band excursion Jubilee Point. Both should be largely patronized.

On account of Victoria day, and in order to give our staff an opportunity of observing the holiday, there will be no issue of The Times on Monday.

—Mr. Harry Neil says that the present boom gives the young men opportunities to rise in the world—especially when considered in connection with the completion of the lift lock.

—Mr. R. V. Winch is erecting a fine cottage at "Yarrowbrae," Stony lake. McIntyre Bros., the contractors, are doing the work. It will be a decided improvement to that part of the lake.

—Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills taken as spring medicine to build up the system and make good rich blood, has no equal. A trial is all they need. Once tried always used. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. 50c per box.

—The Auburn Power Company's current will be shut off from 6 a.m. this morning until 6 a.m. on Monday, to enable connections to be made with the new generator that is being placed in the power house.

—A general meeting of the Peterborough Historical Society was held in the council chamber last night when arrangements were made for the annual meeting of the Ontario Society to be held here this year.

—Mr. John Thompson, the efficient manager of the Dickson Company's mills at Lakefield, has got a gang of men at work putting the mill into shape for the season's operations. He expects to begin cutting in a few days.

—The steamer City of Peterborough, is now in first class shape. Commodore Calcutt deserves every praise for the splendid means he is affording for an agreeable outing down the river.

—The Auditor's report for the village is now about ready for the printer. Mayor Smith and his colleagues intend that the people shall know how their money is being spent.

—Posters for the farmers' picnic at Jubilee Point on June 13th, have been issued from The Times job rooms. The affair promises to be the biggest thing of the kind that has ever taken place in this locality.

—We exceedingly regret a stupid blunder in yesterday's issue in connection with the interment of Mr. Richard J. Cavanagh. The funeral took place yesterday and not on Wednesday as erroneously stated in these columns, and was largely attended.

—The Deering Harvester Co., of Chicago, who proposed to locate their Canadian works in Peterborough, but who afterwards proposed to go to Hamilton, are not likely to locate there after all. The by-law proposing a money grant to the concern was not carried by the ratepayers. Peterborough may get the works after all.

—Here is what a lady has to say for Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema—"I am glad to say that I find a complete cure of my distressing case of eczema. My hands were so bad the nails would come off. I used one box and my hand is all healed." Price 50 cts a box or 3 boxes for $1.00. For sale by Ormond & Walsh.

—The undersigned merchants of Ashburnham have signed a petition to close their respective places of business during the months of June, July, August and September, at the hour of seven o'clock each evening, Saturdays, and evenings before holidays, excepted. They are desirous that their customers bear this in mind. (Signed) J. C. Sullivan, W. Collins, R. J. Weir, D. Hennessy, T. B. Maniece John Kerr, John Malane.

—A writ has been issued against the Hon. Geo. A. Cox, E. B. Ryckman, L. M Jones and W. Y. Soper, by a stockholder of the Cycle Motor Company, for the recovery of the amount of his stock. The plaintiff holds 68 shares of the company, and he asks for a discovery of the true price at which the five businesses which were sold to the company were acquired, and generally for an accounting of the dealings of the defendants with the company. He alleges that in connection with the ratification of the agreements with the five companies the defendants bought for themselves and sold to themselves, that there was no independent board to look into the transactions and no general meeting of shareholders called.

—Toronto Typographical Union has issued a circular on account of the strike that is on the printing department of the T. Eaton Company in that city, which contains the following good advice which can be applied in our own neighborhood, it says: "Let us appeal to our constituents. Instead of buying through the Mail Order system of the Eaton Company patronize the merchants in your own vicinity and keep the cash in your own neighborhood. They can give you as good bargains, and much better for that matter, than you can obtain in this store. And many so-called "bargains" are not bargains at all. The most gullible animal in the world is man, and there is no gullibility equal to that involved in the bargain-hunting humbug. Then quit the exhibition of your gullibility and patronize your "home stores."

HONORING MR. CRANE

The Popular Leader of St. Paul's Choir is Given a Present

Mr. John Crane, the popular organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's church, yesterday received a very pleasing surprise when he had delivered to him a magnificent bust of Beethoven, as a gift from the Jarvis street choir, of Toronto. The present was in recognition of the treatment the choir received in Peterborough a short time ago. Accompanying the gift was the following letter from Mr. Vogt:

Toronto, May 21, 1902.

Dear Mr. Crane,—

Your letter was read to our choir on Friday evening last and its contents were received with much applause. It was felt that the choir should give some expression of your own unselfish efforts in the matter of the excursion and concert, and a committee was appointed to purchase a souvenir of the occasion, and forward it to you personally as the gift of the choir. I was also deputized to write you and express the thanks of the members for having arranged and so carefully carried out a most enjoyable function for us, and at the same time to give expression to the hope that the bust of the greatest of all musicians, which we are sending you, would serve to remind you of the occasion and of the many friends your thoughtful attention to our pleasure has made for you in Toronto.

With kind regards to yourself and Mrs. Crane, and with remembrances to the members of the choir of your church, who co-operated with you in entertaining us, I am, on behalf of the choir of the Jarvis street Baptist church.

Very sincerely yours,

A. S. VOGT.

The bust is of marble and stands about 18 inches high. It is mounted on a handsome alabaster pedestal about six inches in height.

Going to the Coronation

Sergt.-Major Brittain, of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers has received notice of his appointment as representative of his regiment on the Coronation Contingent. It will be remembered that some time ago the Commanding Officer of the Regiment, Lieut.-Colonel E. B. Edwards, after due deliberation with his officers, recommended the names of Sergt Major Brittain and Band-Sergt. Wand. The coronation contingent is billed to leave Canada on May 29th.

MR. CLEGG'S SALARY.

OFFICIAL DENIAL BY HON. MR. TARTE OF THE $1,600 STORY

The Statement in Hansard Made in Error—Mr. Clegg Employed Only by the Public Works Department

A great deal has been made of an erroneous statement reported in Hansard to the effect that Mr. S. Clegg was receiving a double salary, or $1600 per year. The Examiner, knowing the facts, contradicted the statement, made to this effect; but, for the purpose of political capital, they were repeated. Hon. Mr. Tarte, Minister of Public Works, was communicated with in regard to the truth of the reports, and here is his explicit official denial:

Hon. J. R. Stratton, Peterborough Ont.

My Dear Sir,—Mr. Clegg's salary is $800 a year. A mistake was made when it was stated in the House that he was paid $1600. He is only employed by the Department of Public Works.

Truly yours,

J. ISRAEL TARTE.

This official contradiction should silence a statement founded on an error and show, to anyone who is contented with the truth, that Mr. Clegg is receiving only the salary always attached to the position he now occupies.

TWO CHILDREN KILLED.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING AT FENELON FALLS.

A Little Son and Daughter of Mr. Thomas Smith the Victims—Four Members of the Family Called Away in a Month.

During a thunderstorm which passed over Fenelon Falls village about 6.30 Wednesday evening little Jennie and James Smith, aged about fourteen and ten years respectively, children of Mr. Thomas Smith of this place, were killed. The girl was going out to a neighbor's for milk, and as she went out the little brother followed about two yards behind her. Lightning struck and killed both instantly within three yards of the door. Mr. Smith and family have the sympathy of the community, and the more so because of their having buried two other young children on the fourth of this month.

HIS DENUNCIATION OF PHILIPPINE WAR

Senator Hoar Says the American Flag is Emblem of Sacrilege

A DOCTRINE OF SELFISHNESS

Special to The Times.

Washington, May 27.—"You have wasted six hundred millions of treasure. You have sacrificed nearly ten thousand American lives—the flower of our youth. You have slain uncounted thousands of people you desire to benefit. Your generals are coming home from their harvest bringing their sheaves with them in the shape of thousands of sick, wounded and insane to drag out their miserable lives. You have made the American flag in the eyes of a numerous people an emblem of sacrilege in the Christian churches and of burning human dwellings and the horror of water torture. If believe, may, [illegible] in general [illegible] humane. But in some cases they have carried on your warfare with a mixture of American ingenuity and Castilian cruelty."

With these words, contemptuously suggestion of the speaker's forcefulness, George F. Hoar, senator from Massachusetts, this afternoon proceeded in his promised denunciation of the Philippine war and an arrangement of the administrations policy in the archipelago. For weeks past the venerable Republican, who was in harmony with party colleagues upon all important matters except the Philippine question, has been gathering material for his speech. As the day when he was to talk had been announced he was greeted not only by a large representation on the floor, but also by crowds in the galleries.

CONVERTED INTO ENEMIES.

"Your practical statesmanship," he continued, "has succeeded in converting a people, who, three years ago were ready to kiss the hem of the garment of an American, into sullen enemies, possessed of a hatred which centuries cannot eradicate Practical statesmanship of the Declaration of Independence and the golden rule of Independence nothing but a few kind words. What have your ideals cost you and what have they bought for you?

"For the Philippines you have had to repeal the Declaration of Independence; for Cuba you have had to reaffirm it and give it new lustre. For the Philippines you have had to convert the Monroe doctrine into a doctrine of mere selfishness; for Cuba you have acted on it and vindicated it. In Cuba you have got the eternal gratitude of a free people. In the Philippines you have got hatred and sullen submission of a subjugated people."

He contended that what we were fighting for in the Philippines was sovereignty "the principle of eternal dominion over that people," and not their uplifting. He regarded the proposition to allow Filipinos to share in a suggested scheme of government a tacit admission that a large number of them were fit for self-government. Then he said:

"What you have done so far has been merely to get some few thousand children actually at school in the whole Philippine dominion. To get this result you have certainly slain many times that number of parents."

He complimented the American army for its gallantry, heroism and humanity in general, but stated the chief guilt for atrocities committed was on the heads of those who created conditions.

HOT SHOT FOR FUNSTON.

Discussing the capture of Aguinaldo, the senator contended that General Funston in garbing his men in the uniform of the enemy and utilizing forged letters, disregarded not only our own rules of war as laid down in the famous order No. 100, but also the provisions of the Hague convention and the law of hospitality which governs alike everywhere.

"He went to Aguinaldo under the pretense that he was hungered and Aguinaldo fed him," said the senator. "Was not that an act of perfidy?"

Passing to the investigation of the senate committee as to alleged atrocities by American officers and soldiers, the speaker stated that in his opinion the inquiry was only on its threshold.

Alluding to the evidence already adduced he said:

"We are not talking about or inquiring into acts of vengeance committed in the heat of battle. We are talking about torture cold-blooded, deliberate, calculated torture; torture to extort information. Claverhouse did it to the Scotch covenanter with boot and thumb screw. It never until now has been done by a man who spoke English, except in Ireland. The Spanish inquisition did it by slow force and boiling oil. It is said the water cure was borrowed from Spain. I am quite ready to believe it. You tell us that the Philippine people have practised some cruelties themselves.

"Is their conduct any excuse for ours? Mr. President, if stories which come to me in private from officers of the army and from kindred and friends of the soldiers are to be trusted, Spain would have the right to-morrow to wrest the Philippine islands from our grasp on grounds as good, if not better than those which justified us when we made war upon her."

NEW POLITICAL PARTY MAY BE FORMED

Confederation With Canada Now Agitated in Newfoundland

EX-JUDGE MORRISON'S VIEWS

Morine Opposition Party May be Absorbed by New Party Under Morrison

Montreal, May 27.—"The subject of confederation has become such a live one throughout Newfoundland that overtures have already been made towards the formation of a confederation political party."

The speaker was Mr. W. M. Sparks, of St. John's Nfld., who is in the city for a few days.

"Ever since the retirement from the bench of Mr. Justice Morison, junior puisne judge of the Supreme Court and the consequent announcement that he would re-enter politics, there has been a good deal of [illegible]. Of course for some time past the question of confederation has been actively agitated and a short time ago the announcement went around that Mr. Morison was about to form another political party and seek the suffrages of the people. It is generally admitted that it would almost be an impossibility as headed by Premier Bond.

"The Opposition party, however, under Mr. Morine, is almost non-existent [illegible] as a party, and the question that is most discussed is whether it will not be supplanted by the Confederation party, as being organized by Mr. Morison. The first question arises is, where will the candidates come from? While a large number of the Liberal candidates are in favor of annexation, they are sure to stand by Premier Bond, and in a country of the size of Newfoundland it is not easy to get candidates. There is a certain element in the island entirely opposed to annexation that the island is a mine of wealth, and that Canada is particularly anxious to become master of it. They claim that once Confederation was effected, the Dominion Government would try to secure control of the various industries and fill all the different departments of the public service, with its own office-seekers. Politicians seeking the suffrages of the people have been careful not to advocate Confederation too strongly, owing the existence of such an element.

"Time alone will tell what will happen in our island."

HOW THE U. S. REGARDS OUR TRADE

SOME IMPORTANT TRADE FIGURES

Uncle Sam is Anxious for Our Trade, and Realizes That he Must Reach for it by Means of Reciprocity

New York, May 27.—The World says: In a report recently published by our State Department Consul-General Bittinger calls attention to the remarkable prosperity of Canada, whose industries, agriculture, internal trade and foreign commerce all "reached the highest mark" in 1901. Her imports and exports aggregated $386,000,000—nearly double their combined value ten years ago, and a marvellous sum, remembering that her total population is only a little more than 5,000,000.

Mr. Bittinger says the preferential tariff given by Canada to British goods has greatly increased the trade between her and "the mother country." Nevertheless, trade follows the line of least resistance and obstruction, and the United States' trade with Canada is increasing still faster. While the Canadians bought $43,000,000 worth of British goods and sold Britain $105,000,000 worth last year, they bought [illegible] worth of American goods and sold Americans $72,000,000 worth of theirs.

If Canadians buy more than twice as much from our people as from the "preferred" British exports, in spite, too, of the heavy tariff we levy on their exports to us while at British ports they pay almost no duty at all, how much larger will our trade with them be when, as our Consul-General recommends, "liberal reciprocal relations are entered upon!"

Lightning Remedy for Cramps.

Some people have cramps pretty often, others only now and again. But when you do have them it is a mighty quick relief you want. Polson's Nerviline is as sure as death to relieve cramps in five seconds — it's instantaneous, just a few drops in sweetened water and the pain is gone. Buy a bottle of Nerviline to-day, and keep it handy. Nerviline is a common household necessity and only costs 25 cents.

PLUCKY MEN FOUGHT DEATH

Notes Written by Entombed Miners Show That Some Lived For Hours After the Explosion

Special to The Times.

Knoxville, Tenn., May 27 — The latest estimates as to loss of life in the Fraterville coal mine disaster at Coal Creek is 226, including contract miners, day laborers and boy helpers. The last find reported was that of thirteen bodies in an entry, and with these thirteen, all of whom were dead, were found six letters written by five men before life became extinct. One of these letters gave the time of day it was written at 2.30 o'clock Monday afternoon, thus indicating that these and perhaps other entombed men lived many hours after the terrible explosion, which occurred Monday morning at 7.30 o'clock. The letters gave a general suggestion of the suffering that was undergone, indicating that the men were gradually being strangled to death by the foul air that was entering the mine and gaseous air that was filling the mine. One piteously read:

"My God, for another breath."

The letters in the main were directions to families as to what dispositions should be made of the writers' bodies and business affairs and instructions as to raising the families. One unfortunate, who leaves neither father, mother, brother or sisters, addressed his letter "To Everybody," and pleaded that they change their way of living.

State Mine Inspector Shiflett will not make his inspection until the mine is cleared of some of the debris. Mrs. George Atkins, wife of the mine foreman who was killed in the disaster, has completely lost her mind.

The rescuing parties that went in are completely exhausted and new men have been sent into the mines. Physicians positively forbade any of the first rescuers returning.

Money is badly needed, and the outside world is urged to send in contributions to R. M. Lindsay, chairman of the relief committee, Coal Creek.

THE DEATH ROLL AT FERNIE, B.C. NOW NUMBERS OVER 151 PERSONS

Up to Midnight Last Night 151 Bodies Had Been Recovered--Mob of Enraged Miners Escort a Constable to the Outskirts of the Town

Special to The Times.

Fernie, B.C., May 26.—Charmed by a sober but angry mob of 600 miners and citizens, William Stevens, provincial policeman, lost no time in placing himself outside the town limits last evening. It is hardly likely in the light of past events that he will return.

What incensed the miners against Stevens was the report that last night he has stated that he wished two hundred and fifty more miners had been killed in the terrible explosion, it is freely stated, now that the intense excitement has subsided, that had it not been Sunday evening and the saloons all closed Stevens' chances for a whole skin would have been exceedingly small. As it was, it was with difficulty that the cooler heads saved him.

The Death Roll 151.

Fernie is but recovering from the stupor of mind into which it was thrown by the explosion. Men who were in the vicinity of the tunnels when the [illegible] distantly occurred, state that the top of the tipple and the fan-house shot one thousand feet in the air, while around there fell tons of coal dust and small stones. Careful and conservative checking of information from all sources now tends to the placing of the number killed at 151, and at midnight but fifty-one bodies had been recovered. Seventy-two hours after the disaster, the chaotic condition of affairs which obtained at the mine exit immediately after the explosion occurred has given place to order, and it is expected that many bodies will be recovered during the night.

Women there are who cling to the forlorn hope that beloved husbands and sons will yet emerge alive, but the mine management holds out but little hope that any of the 151 have escaped. Crowds of men and women cluster around the offices of the coal company awaiting anxiously the bulletins which may, and which in the majority of cases do, shatter their every hope.

The latest information received up to noon to-day of the coal mine disaster at Fernie by Mr. Robert Jaffray, president of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Mine Company, was to the effect that the work of recovering the bodies was proceeding satisfactorily. At the time of sending the despatch, 51 bodies had been recovered.

"It is our intention to look well after our people up there," said Mr. Jaffray. "Anything like an indiscriminate distribution of funds will do more harm than good, for there are plenty of unscrupulous people in the locality who will be ready to take advantage of families or widows wh might find themselves suddenly in possession of considerable sums of money. Whatever is done by the outside public should be one through a committee of the best men to be found in the district. There is no destitution nor will there be, so far as this company can do anything to avoid it. Our officers are not to stand on legal rights, but to attend to every case in the most liberal spirit."

VALUABLE MINERAL FIND

Gold, Graphite and Cinnabar Deposits in Ontario

Sault Ste Marie, Mich., May 27.—A marvellous mineral discovery is announced by Louis Causley, who has been prospecting on the Michipicoten Range. Causley claims he has discovered three valuable properties, one gold, another graphite and the third cinnabar, a source of mercury, about 100 miles north of the Canadian Soo.

Causley recently made known his find to reputable people here, who made an investigation and returned yesterday. They say it is a good thing and will turn out all right. They brought back with them splendid specimens of the three minerals. A company is being formed to work the property.

General - Sports

The big Lakefield picnic on Saturday conducted by Rev. Father Phelan, was a great success. There was a very large attendance from town, notwithstanding the rain, and those who went were delightfully entertained by the popular priest and his assistants, who spared no pains to make everybody at home. Meals were served in the big exhibition building, the two large tables being superintended, respectively, by the ladies of Lakefield and of Young's Point.

Mr. R. C. Strickland was called to the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. D. A. Frazer, M.P., of Guysboro, N.S., James Kendry, M.P., F. D. Monk and M.P., Montreal, D. O'Connell, J. W. Mu[illegible] Father Phelan. [illegible], Rev. Father McCabe, and Rev.

The lacrosse match between teams from the Total Abstinence Society and the Y.M.C.A. proved most interesting, and was very closely contested. The passing done by the two home divisions was very accurate, but the slippery condition of the grass, consequent upon the rain, spoiled many pretty plays. The final score stood 6—3 in favor of the T.A.S. Mr. W. Rudkins proved to be a most capable referee. The teams were composed as follows:

T. A. S.—Goal, B. Doris; point, J. McDonough; c. point, R. Mahoney; defence field, F. Dorscher, W. Meagher, W. Crowley; centre, F. McGrath; home field, G. Lynch, J. Gordon, J. Anglesye; outside home, Call F. McCoy; inside home, E. Mitchell.

200 yard race—1. F. McGrath; 2, W. Crowley; 3, B. Cameron.

Putting the shot—1, J. McDonough; 2, M. Coughlin; 3, Fred. Smith.

Quoit match—1, G. Giroux. 2, M. Doherty.

Irish jig—John Henry.

A Delicious Breakfast Dish For Summer

Popular in City and Country.

As a summer breakfast dish Malt Breakfast Food is unquestionably the leading grain food in city and country. It is free from all the irritating, heating and hard-to-digest qualities peculiar to oatmeal and other grain breakfast foods. A breakfast of Malt Breakfast Food will give more strength, energy and vigor than any other form of food can afford.

A prominent Toronto gentleman writes as follows: "Last summer to avoid the city heat and dust we secured comfortable quarters in the Muskoka district. Our regular morning meal was Malt Breakfast Food, and quite often we used the delicious food for supper. My children were delighted with it, and thoroughly relished it. We use it every morning in our city home, and will have no other while we can get Malt Breakfast Food." Your grocer can supply you.

CHANGE OF TONE AS TO BOER WAR

A STATUTE OF FREDERICK

German Papers Declare That the Emperor Should Not Have Been Encouraged to Give One to the U. S.

Special to The Times.

London, May 26.—The Vienna correspondent of The Times quotes an article from the Neue Freie Presse, which confirms the idea that peace is desired as eagerly on the continent as in Britain. The article also shows a change of tone in this and other Austrian papers regarding the Boer war, and justifies the inference that since the German tariff bill has opened the eyes of the Austrians to the duplicity of their existing allies, they have ceased to take the cue from the pro-Boer Prussian papers.

Berlin, May 26—The Berlin correspondent of The Times says that a number of German papers declare that Dr. Von Holleben should not have encouraged Emperor William to give a statue of Frederick the Great to the United States.

CHINA'S TROUBLES MAGNIFIED

Hong Kong Reformers Hope Thereby to Incite a General Uprising

Hong Kong May 27.—The correspondent of The Sun, who has just returned from Canton, where he made inquiries of the officers as to affairs in Kwangsi, is convinced that the stories of the rebellion in that province have been grossly exaggerated. He also visited Pakoi and Hoihow, on the Tonquin frontier, and found confirmation of the statements of the Canton officers.

A number of reformers in Hong Kong are chiefly responsible for the circulation of the reports. These people hope that the depredations of bands of pirates and discontented soldiers if constantly made public will eventuate in a serious uprising. The British naval officers who are patrolling the delta of the West River are of the same opinion. The largest band of rebels they have heard of did not exceed 1,500 men.

BOUNDARY MONUMENTS

Capt. Richardson Says He Was Unable to Find any in Alaska

Washington, May 27.—A report has been received at the State Department from Capt. Willis Richardson, 8th Infantry, U. S. A. who was sent to Alaska to investigate statements that a Canadian surveying party had destroyed a stone monument marking the territorial boundary between the British possessions and Alaska and also to endeavor to locate any other boundary monuments. It has been a tradition that the Russian Government erected monuments showing the division between Alaska and the British Northwest, but no record regarding these marks has been found at St. Petersburg or Washington. To discover them, if they exist, means that the boundary dispute between the United States and Great Britain would probably be settled without trouble.

Capt. Richardson says in his report that he was unable to find any evidence that the alleged monument had been removed or to substantiate the stories that other monuments exist. The State Department does not acknowledge that there are no boundary monuments and will continue its inquiries on the subject.

EARTHQUAKES IN FLORIDA

Severe Shocks Being Felt in Florida and Georgia

St. Augustine, Fla., May 27.—Almost continuous shocks, presumably of earthquake, were felt here from nine until midnight last night.

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.—The earthquake here was accompanied by a succession of short, but decided reports like distant cannonading, seemingly from far out at sea. The sounds were unlike thunder, having no reverberating roll, and were accompanied by decided tremors, while the sky in the south-west was suffused with a glow.

HOW THE BOERS FOUGHT CANADIANS

A BOER DRIVE NOT A SLEIGH DRIVE

Boers Hate and Fear the Canadians—Interesting Accounts of the Celebrated Battle

Montreal May 27 — Trooper John Eakin, writing from Driekuil, under date of April 4, to his brother, Mr. William R. Eakin, of Messrs. McLean, Kennedy & Co., gives an interesting account of the fight at Klein Hart's River.

He says, in part:

We started back to Klerksdorp on Wednesday and remained until Saturday, when we started out on the trek again. We halted at Rhenoster again at 2 p. m. on Saturday. Sunday morning we rose at 1 a.m. and marched at 3 a.m. We halted again at three o'clock on Sunday afternoon until 1 a.m. Monday (Easter), when we turned out at 3 a.m., and started on a reconnaissance in force towards Hart's River. At eleven o'clock on Easter Monday our advance guard sighted the Boers and exchanged shots with them, but when the main body advanced the Boers cleared off. We halted at one o'clock at Boschbult, and formed a laager. We had just got our horse lines down and were putting up a barbed wire entanglement around the camp when a shell from Johnny Boer came screaming through the air and exploded outside our laager.

THOUGHT OF HIS MEN

There was a dozen or so of us standing together, with Major Cameron in our midst, when the first shell came. "Get under cover, boys," shouted the major, and the whole bunch ducked under the transport waggon. We only stopped there a minute, however, when we came out, picked up our rifles and got into the firing line. Half of our force was placed all around the camp, and the other half started making trenches. The Boers kept on pouring shrapnel on us from four guns, but luckily for us they are poor artillerymen, and most of their shells went over our camp, quite a few of them, though, exploding right in the centre of it. My troop got orders to saddle up, and I was saddling my horse when a shell came hissing through the air, and ploughing a big hole in the ground about five yards from me. It failed to explode, which was lucky for me and several others who were near by. I let the horse and saddle go and made for the firing line. The Boers had now our camp completely surrounded and were pouring a heavy fire on us.

MADE IT HOT FOR BOERS.

They galloped to within 800 yards of our lines, no doubt with the intention of rushing us, and capturing the whole outfit, but we let our two 15-pounders, four pom-poms, one Maxim and 1,00 rifles loose on them, and cut them up fearfully. The fight lasted for two hours and a half, when the enemy cleared off, having evidently got enough fight. The fight took place on the level veldt, with not a hill as far as you could see. The Boers had about 2,000 men, while our force numbered 1,800 of all ranks. Our casualties were about 200 killed and wounded, while the Boers had between 200 and 300 killed and goodness knows how many wounded. During the fight the men were alternately in the firing line and digging trenches, and I tell you I worked with the pick as I never worked before, the bullets flying all around. Life was sweet during that time

LIEUT. REFORDS COOLNESS.

After the excitement of the first few minutes all ranks were very cool. About the coolest man in the bunch was Andy Reford, who is a lieutenant of "C" squadron. I saw him carry six wounded men from the firing line to the hospital, and a shell once dug into the ground two feet from him.

This is only an account of the part of the fight that I took part in. "E" squadron, of the C.M.R.'s who were the rear guard, were cut off and cut up badly, having eight men killed and about thirty wounded. A corporal and five men of "E" were cut off from their troop. They made for a kopje and held it for twenty hours against a force of fifty Boers, and did not surrender until two of their number were killed and two wounded.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE ENGAGEMENT.

Toronto, May 27.—Another letter has been received—the second since the battle of Harts River, by Dr. D. W. McPherson, of 201 Carlton Street, from Clayton S. Corson. The letter is dated April 10, from the General Hospital at Johannesburg, and reads as follows:

"Here I am up against it for fair, with two bullet wounds in me. I got hit pretty hard through the right hip and through the right forearm. Both bullets hit the bone. My right hip is so injured that I cannot move my leg at all, and it has also gone half an inch shorter than the other.

"The doctors have had me under the "x" rays twice already to try and find out what is the matter with it. My right forearm is in such a condition that I cannot straighten it out. It is all I can do to write and that is one of the hardest things I ever tried to do. I am pretty well banged up in the King's service.

"By the way things are going on this war won't be over for another three years yet. I suppose the papers had a big account of our fight. You can bet your life it was warm for a few hours. The boys who were at Paardeberg and this fight say that this one was the hottest. It was certainly hot enough for me.

"There were three cross-fires, so you could not get shelter any place, even if there had been any to get. We fell into a nice trap, and had to fight for all we were worth to save our position, and Sir Walter Kitchener said if it had not been for we Canadians, Delarey would have had all the transports besides our guns.

"We made it so hot for the Boers that

The fleet commanded by Prince Henry of Germany, which arrived off the Irish coast the other day, is said to be the most powerful aggregation of foreign warships that has ever visited any British or Irish port. The squadron consists of eight line-of-battle ships in two divisions, and three cruisers, and is larger numerically, if not in actual power, than the British Channel Squadron or the French Northern Squadron. A noteworthy quality of the fleet is its homogeneity. The four vessels of the first division, of the so-called Kaiser class, are identical in all respects, size, manoeuvring capacity, radius of action, speed and gun power. All of them are protected by the same weight of the very finest Harveyized nickel-steel armor. The fleet is practically new, the oldest of the first division vessels being only five years old, and the oldest of the others only ten years. Before returning to German waters the fleet will make a complete circuit of the United Kingdom.

IMPERIAL FEDERATION

The Saturday Review seems to read the condition of public feeling in the colonies on the subject of Imperial Federation somewhat differently from certain high authorities in Canada. It says: "As it is now beyond doubt that the young British states of the new world intend to throw in their lot with Great Britain, a closer legislative union must be devised for purposes of commerce and defence." At the same time, with characteristic English conservatism and caution, it warmly approves the following words of Lord Salisbury in his recent speech to the Primrose League: "There is no danger that appears to me more serious for the time that lies before us than an attempt to force the various parts of the Empire into a mutual arrangement and subordination for which they are not ready and which may only produce a reaction in favour of the old state of things." It would almost seem as if the British Premier had got a tip from Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In fact, if we had to risk a conjecture, we should say that he had. Be that as it may, his words should and will carry weight. The last thing that is wanted is anything like hasty or inconsiderate action. We join with the Saturday Review in approving his Lordship's utterance whatever may have inspired it.

MORGAN AFTER THE RAILWAYS.

The report that the Morgan combine will now turn its attention to the English railways is the announcement of the expected. It is not at all likely that such a rumour has any root of reality in a serious statement by the combine. It would not go about the task of buying a controlling interest in the British railways by sending for the newspapers.

Still, having "rounded up" a large share of the regular Atlantic fleet, it is a fair inference that the combine will endeavour to make sure that its vessels will be well fed with freight and passengers at either end. Already Mr. Morgan and his friends probably control a fair share of the American railway system; and, if they can now add the British railways to the combination, they may pretty well laugh at any British-American competition which may threaten.

For it is the railway and not the ship which carries the key to the position. Sea power is dominant in war, but rail power is the winning factor in a commercial struggle. The railways of British and the United States could agree to route their freight by lines opposed to the combine, and thus leave it suspended empty in mid-ocean while its rival's ships would pass and repass loaded to the line. If Britain can keep hold of her railways, she need fear no permanent alienation of her shipping trade.

The hint here for Canada is "writ large." We must keep possession of our railways. If we are assured of their support, and are confident that Morgan cannot buy them away from us, we will have a land basis here for the establishment of a fast Atlantic line, which probably cannot be secured in the United States. Canadian railways can keep the Canadian line supplied with freight, much of which will undoubtedly come to us from American cities and by American railways denied access to their own seaboard by the Morgan combination and its allies. Thus our line will be the one sure-footed antagonist from this continent of the Morgan syndicate; and, having the shortest ocean passage and an unassailable financial independence, it will bid fair to beat Morgan at his own game.

Then the sympathy which a Canadian liner, fighting to maintain an all-British route independent of an American monopoly, would be certain to receive from the British people, would be of the greatest value. Mr. Morgan would have to have his British railways well in hand to keep a large share of the freight from coming to us. And our line of fast steamers, once established in this way, would outlast the combine; and keep for us the cream of the Atlantic trade even after the ports of New York and Boston had secured their freedom again.

But the basis of all this prosperity is Canadian—or, at any rate, British—control of Canadian railways. And if Canada cannot keep control of her national highways at a time of national and Imperial crisis we may as well vote Parliamentary Government a failure!

The Day of Miracles not Past

A Toronto Star reporter investigated the case of Mr. George Warner, and found that after thirteen years of almost total deafness, he had been cured by inhaling Catarrhozone.

This proves that where Catarrhozone treatment is employed, impaired hearing and deafness can be cured. Catarrhozone always brings quick relief, and is warranted to give lasting satisfaction. All sufferers from impaired hearing, deafness, head noises and ringing in the ears are advised to inhale Catarrhozone and derive the great benefit it is capable of affording. DO NOT NEGLECT THE LITTLE ILLS OF TO-DAY

The Use of Paine's Celery Compound Will Eradicate From The Blood and System The Seeds of Disease

As grains of sand make our lofty mountains, drops of water the mighty ocean, and as our massive buildings are made of one brick piled upon another; so do the little ills of life contribute to the building up of deadly diseases in the body.

Experienced medical men claim that fully three-fourths of our men and women enter the summer season with little ills and symptoms of disease, which must develop into serious and fatal troubles if not banished at once.

We hear our friends complaining daily of rheumatic tendencies, sharp and darting neuralgic pains, dyspepsia, pains in the side and back, nervousness and sleeplessness; and we see with our own eyes the effects of impure blood in facial blotches, eruptions and sores. The little ills and pains of to-day build up the alarming and fatal diseases that follow days and weeks of neglect.

Wise and intelligent people who have looked into the claims of Paine's Celery Compound and followed its remarkable cures of relatives, friends and neighbors, use it themselves with faith and confidence, to banish their symptoms of coming troubles, to cleanse the blood, to re-establish nerve force, energy and bodily strength, so that they will be in condition to withstand the enervating effects of the coming hot weather.

In every community where Paine's Celery Compound has been used at this season to banish disease, it is regarded as a godsend. Workers in offices, shops, factories and weary and rundown wives and mothers in their homes have thanked heaven for Dr. Phelps' marvellous prescription, because it made them well. Try a bottle or two, ye who are ailing and sick: it will give you what you most stand in need of—health and new life.

Ready for Rochambeau Unveiling

Special to The Times.

Washington, D. C. May 23—Everything is in readiness for the unveiling tomorrow of the Rochambeau monument. The ceremonies will take place at 11 o'clock. Senator Lodge, Massachusetts has been chosen orator of the occasion and General Brugere will make a speech to which Ambassador Cambon will respond. French music will form most of the programme and French and American flags will wave side by side.

Today's luncheon on board the French warship Gaulois proved a notable entertainment. The invited guests included the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Alice Roosevelt, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hay, the Admiral of the Navy and Mrs. Dewey, the General of the Army and Mrs. Miles and the Ambassadors and Ministers of the European powers.

Wonderful Home Helpers

The Ablest Analytical Chemists Say They are the Best

The ablest and best analytical chemists in the world affirm without hesitation that Diamond Dyes are the purest and best dyestuffs for home dyeing. All the colors are guaranteed fast to light and washing with soap; they color more goods, package for package, than any other dye in the world.

As there are imitations of the popular Diamond Dyes, ladies should be careful of dealers who attempt to recommend the worthless makes. It should be remembered that these imitation dyes are made up of poisonous and dangerous adulterations, and the hands are often injured by them. Diamond Dyes are so easy to use that even a child can work with them successfully. See that your dealer supplies you with the "Diamond"; refuse all others.

If you are interested in home mat and rug making, send your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q. and you will receive free of cost new designs to select from.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD THE HEINTZMAN & CO. PIANO

Holds First Place in the Piano World.

Here's a piano that's the cynosure of all eyes. Musical critics know it as an instrument that holds a place by itself among Canadian made pianos—and that ranks with foreign pianos of widest reputation. It is the ideal piano.

At all great functions and musical events it is the choice of the greatest artists. It is the piano that was the choice of Royalty—being used exclusively on the royal train by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York in their journey through Canada.

A Real Help.

The Woman's Aid Society in New York has done great work in helping the poor. Like all charitable organizations, it has to contend with ingratitude, stupidity, and wilful improvidence. The "Commercial Advertiser" relates one instance that is amusing to read of, but must have been a trifle discouraging to the society.

To a poor woman whose husband was in jail they gave some clothing and ten dollars in money, thinking that she would know best what she wanted, and so spend the money more wisely than they.

A week after the gift had been made a deputation of members called at the squalid home to see the results of their assistance. They found no improvement in the condition of the family.

"Well, Mrs. Nolan," asked one of them, "how are you getting along?"

"Fine," said Mrs. Nolan.

"Did the clothes fit, and did you find a use for the money?"

"Sure, the clothes fitted fine, an' the childer looked so nice I had all their pictures took wid the money ye gave me, an' I'm going to have me own took this week to send to the old folks in Ireland."

Algy — Pooh Gussie's condition is vewy serious, indeed. He cawn't even waise his head fwom the pillow. Percy —Great heavens! What's the matteh? Algy—The foolish fellah lost his head in a game of ping-pong lawst evening, and played steadily foh neahly fifteen minutes.

He—You have a headache, you say? She—Yes, I have.

"Do you suffer much from headache?"

"Yes; always when I have it."—Yonkers Statesman.

And the said Inspectors may require additional amounts, not exceeding 20 per cent. of the quantities hereinbefore specified, for the above mentioned institutions to be delivered thereat at the contract prices at any time up to the 15th day of July, 1903.

Tenders will be received for the whole quantity above specified or for the quantities required in each institution. An accepted check for $500, payable to the order of the Hon. the Provincial Secretary, must be furnished by each tenderer as a guarantee of his bona fides, and two sufficient sureties will be required for the due fulfilment of each contract. Specifications and forms and conditions of tenders may be obtained from the Inspectors of Prisons and Public Charities, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, or from the Bursars of the respective institutions. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the Department will not be paid for it.

J. R. STRATTON,
Provincial Secretary.

Parliament Buildings, Toronto, May 12, 1902.

No Comparison

A sense of proportion is an excellent thing, and an old soldier who writes to The Globe upon the subject of the recent defeat of Lord Methuen makes a very good point as to some of the comments passed by certain newspapers. He signs himself as "one who saw this brave brigade from start to finish on October 25, 1854." and writes as follows:—

"I read the account of the Boer charge on General Methuen's rear-guard taken from The Standard newspaper, London, and published in The Globe of the 18th. The Standard compares the ride of the Boers with the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava. The editor of The Standard must know well there is no comparison. General Methuen's column or field force of all ranks was only about 700 or so. The Light Brigade, with the brave Cardigan leading, went right through the centre of thirty thousand Russians, with sixty guns, in a commanding position, blazing away on the brigade as they were advancing down to the guns, where they had to put the Russian gunners out of the way. They tried to get away the guns, but found it impossible. Every man had to fight for his life back through cavalry and artillery, as they all closed in on them with the intention to capture or kill what was left on the retreat. The brave Cardigan, who obeyed his chief's order to advance and take the guns, knowing well at the time it was impossible, was about the last to return. From the time the brigade started until what was left returned—about 180 when the roll was called after the return—twenty minutes would cover the time. Bear this in mind: it was every man for himself to fight his way back, as they were all broken up in the rush at the guns by the Russian artillery firing on the whole, Russian and British, at the same time. Every volley carried off as many Russians as British. This statement is correct about the Russians firing on their own men. It was a surprise to see any return from the dreadful artillery fire they got from the Russians."

Brave, dashing and skilful Delarey's charge certainly was; it was exactly such a rush as many times before in the history of war has carried cavalry to victory. To persons accustomed to think of the Boers as unable to attack, accustomed also to think of the day of cavalry as over, it must be a surprise to read of such a charge. But the Boers have been moulded by two years of warfare into excellent soldiers, able to attack as well as to defend, and the loose formations of modern war offer peculiarly good opportunities to good cavalry trained to shoot from the saddle. To compare such a charge to the Balaclava charge, or to Von Bredow's "death-ride" at Vionville, when a few German squadrons shook the whole French line of battle and saved their overmatched infantry, is absurd, as my old soldier correspondent convincingly points out.

In this connection a personal reference to Lord Methuen may be introduced, showing him in a light possibly unfamiliar to the majority of newspaper readers. Lord Methuen, as is indicated in the paragraph which is quoted, is a man of a deeply devotional turn of mind. The quotation is from The Daily Graphic, and is as follows:—

"A largely attended public meeting was held last evening at Corsham (near Bath, in England)—the home of Lord Methuen—for the purpose of passing a resolution to be sent to the wounded General, expressing his fellow-townsmen's high admiration for his distinguished services to the country during the South African campaign, and their sincere sympathy with him in being wounded. The Rev. J. D. Dunlap, vicar of Corsham, presided. The following telegram was sent:—

"'Dunlap, Corsham. To Lord Methuen, Klerksdorp: Enthusiastic public meeting. Resolution sincere sympathy and speedy recovery. Shall sing your hymn Sunday.'

"Mr. Dunlap explained that the hymn referred to was 'Lead, Kindly Light,' Lord Methuen's favorite hymn, which he promised his Lordship should be sung in church the first Sunday in every month. He had received a letter from the General speaking of the comfort it gave him to know that he was remembered on the first Sunday in the month, and also in their prayers. The resolution was carried by acclamation, and it was also agreed to telegraph to Lady Methuen informing her of the terms of their message to her husband."

Some dispute has arisen as to Lord Methuen's nationality. It cannot be appraised with absolute accuracy; the family was originally Scotch, it is said, from Perthshire, and has for many years been settled in England, living in Wiltshire, at Corsham. Lord Methuen's grandfather was elevated to the Peerage in 1838; prior to that he had for many years been M.P. for his county. It may be added that Lord Methuen pronounces his name in three syllables, with the accent on the first.

The Culture of Celery.

"Celery Culture" is the title of another of the popular publications of the United States Department of Agriculture now in press, known as Farmers' Bulletins. "Little more than twenty-five years ago," says the bulletin, "the celery crop, which now forms such an important factor in market-gardening interests, was cultivated by few growers only. Celery was to be found on the menu of a few of the leading hotels, but not in many homes. Its use has spread until at present, with the output reckoned by the carloads, it is classed as a wholesome and palatable addition to the fare of all classes. All of the cultivated varieties now in use," continues Mr. W. R. Beattie, the author of the bulletin, "have been derived from the wild celery, a native of the marshes of southern England. This wild celery was for a long time considered poisonous, which was a natural supposition, as it belongs to the same family as poison hemlock." Mr. Beattie, after reviewing the value of celery from a commercial standpoint, notes the nutrition contained in the plant, which, by the way, is not so very great, but it adds a most palatable addition to the table in the winter season, when a great quantity of meat is eaten and few vegetables. It is generally considered as one of the most wholesome of vegetables.

Curious Bits of News.

The English stockholders in Marconi's wireless telegraph company value the inventor's life so highly at this critical period of his experimentation that they have had him insured for $750,000.

The sale of oleomargarine in the United States is increasing rapidly, and one of the causes of the growing sales is said to be the large amount of free advertising that it has received from the debates in Congress and the State legislatures and the newspapers, in consequence of the efforts made to suppress it.

A much-valued distinction has been conferred upon the proprietors of a large cigar factory at Havana. The firm have received an order from England to furnish the cigars for the royal banquet which is to be held after the coronation of King Edward. The order includes three sizes and amounts to several thousand cigars. A unique feature is that there is no stipulation whatever as to the price, this matter being left entirely to the judgment of the manufacturers.

Court etiquette and religious scruples have had an amusing tussle at The Hague. The trouble arose when the daughters of Dr. Kuyper, the Premier, were invited to the first court ball of the season. Low-necked dresses were commanded, but the Misses Kuyper decided that decollete dresses were inconsistent with their religious principles. They applied for a dispensation, but received a curt reply from the mistress of the ceremonies, who declared that time-honored customs of the Dutch court must be adhered to. Dr. Kuyper made direct representations on the subject to Queen Wilhelmina, with the result that a compromise was arranged. The Misses Kuyper will stay away from the ball, but will take tea with their sovereign in high-necked dresses the same afternoon.

The "Tailor and Cutter," which has been accustomed to describe Joseph Chamberlain as the pink of fashion, has this to say of the Colonial Secretary in a recent issue: "We are sorry to note that Mr. Chamberlain is developing quite a stoop, and fear he is losing some of his old-time smartness. It is true that his monocle is still in its old place, but we miss the familiar orchid, and, as we have examined his garments, we could not but feel that conservatism was sadly apparent, for there was much in them that was not up to date." Mr. Chamberlain's coat lapels, says the "Tailor and Cutter," are plain, heavy, and disfigured by a long, gaping breast-pocket, like some ugly wound, calling for assistance. The washing vest of Mr. Chamberlain, the paper adds, was quite out of harmony with his coat, while his trousers were wide and unshapely.

The Millionaire and the Pie.

One time a millionaire found himself at nightfall in a small town that was ministered to by no railroad. And he had in his pocket a one-hundred-dollar bill and in his stomach a sense of hunger.

And he went to the only store in the town to buy food for himself. Now the keeper of the store was a man of much caution and narrow mind.

"I am as hungry as my stomach knows how to be," said the millionaire affably. "Sell me that veal pie."

As he spoke he laid down the hundred-dollar bill.

The cautious storekeeper picked it up and looked at it with doubt mingled with distrust and accompanied with dubiety. Then he said: "My veal pie is worth ten cents to me, but I never heard of such a bill as that. Give me one with another picture on it, for this one is not worth a veal pie, I am sure."

And the millionaire said:

"My friend, it so happens that this evening finds me with no other picture bills upon my person nor yet any coin. The bill is surely worth a hundred of the ordinary, every-day kind. But that is neither here nor there."

But the storekeeper shook his head sourly.

"Nothing will recompense me for the veal pie but money that I can understand. There may be hundred-dollar bills, but I never saw one before. I know the worth of my veal pie, and if you have ten cents you can eat it, but if you haven't you can't."

"But I have not ten cents," said the millionaire; "so let us put it on another basis. Give me the veal pie out of charity, for my stomach is not used to being put off."

"Now we're on familiar ground," said the storekeeper, as he sliced a piece of cheese and ate it; "I have seen beggars many times, and as I never saw one so well dressed as you are I doubt you. You cannot be a beggar. Your clothes betray you, and even if you were one I would not help you as I do not believe in encouraging mendicancy."

"You are difficult beyond a doubt," said the millionaire, raising his eyebrows and shaking his head. "I have it. Let me work for the veal pie. I am strong. Have you no boxes that need unpacking, no goods that need to be shelved?"

Said the storekeeper, looking at the clock: "I have never insulted the frame that the Lord gave me by calling in others to do that which I can do myself. My boxes are unpacked and my goods are shelved. If you have ten cents you can take the veal pie, but be quick, for it is the hour of closing."

Then the millionaire felt in his vest pockets and found a counterfeit dime which he had received in change the day before. And rendered desperate by his hunger he gave the storekeeper the dime and received in exchange the veal pie. For to the near-sighted storekeeper the coin looked good.

As for the millionaire, he ate the pie like a shipwrecked mariner. And the near-sighted storekeeper dropped the counterfeit into his till with contentment.—Charles Battell Loomis in "Saturday Evening Post."

The 7:45 Express

An Adventure in an English Compartment Car.

By FRANCIS CHURCHILL WILLIAMS.

Two men were sitting in the smoking-room of a London club. One, a tall, athletic looking fellow with black hair and clean-cut features, was slowly blowing rings of smoke in the air as he lay back in the big arm-chair. The other man, slight and clean-shaven, with a singularly mobile face and twinkling gray eyes, was looking over a daily paper. Between them was a small table furnished with a couple of stands of club soda and a decanter of brandy which gave signs of having been well used.

"Gerald," said the small man all at once, dropping the paper into his lap, "what do you think of train robbers?"

The tall man looked up in lazy surprise.

"Toppy Russel," he drawled, "now, what in the name of all that's wonderful ever put such a question as that into your head?"

"The paper," explained the other; "and seriously I ask you, what do you think of train robbers?"

"And just as seriously I reply," returned the tall man, "that I think the fellows who strip you of your watch and valuables, and depart with your Gladstone or portmanteau, are clumsy rogues at the best. And the people they rob—well, they are a shade less admirable; for in every case I have heard of they appear to have acted like cowards or fools, and a rogue's always preferable to either of these, to my mind. And now that you have my candid and, doubtless, authoritative opinion on train robbers, please finish that B. and S. and try one of these cigars; they are worth trying, if I say it myself."

"Only one more question," said Russel, as he took the proffered weed. "You laugh at the way railway travelers act in these little affairs. Now, how would you act? Suppose a fellow were suddenly to put a pistol to your cheek and insinuate a desire for your watch! No one is near. You are alone in the carriage. What would you do?"

"I'd knock the pistol out of his hand, while pretending to comply with his demand, and throw him out the window after it."

Caruthers said this quietly and determinedly, and Russel knew him too well to suspect braggadocio, so he only laughed lightly at his companion's emphatic reply and proceeded to envelop himself in clouds of smoke.

"Well," said the tall man, looking at his watch, and starting up; "I must be going. The express starts at seven-forty-five, and I've to stop at a couple of places before making the station." And he rang for his bag and overcoat.

"Now, Gerald Caruthers," said his companion, as Gerald was being helped into his coat, "remember what you have told me. If I hear of any attempt at train robbery on the seven-forty-five express I shall not write to you, but shall at once have the track examined, and the body of the robber discovered and interred. I suppose you will be willing to do that much for your victim, won't you?"

"Oh, certainly," laughed Caruthers, and the next moment he had wrung Russel's hand and had gone.

At the station he secured a first-class ticket, and then set about to find an empty compartment if possible. As luck would have it, the second coach he looked into was unoccupied, and he quickly stowed his portmanteau away and, settling himself luxuriously in the corner, uttered a silent prayer that no one would come in to interrupt, with the usual traveler's commonplaces and platitudes, the nap he had in prospect. He looked at his watch; only one minute remaining till train time, and already he heard the doors being banged to as the guard went his rounds.

And then—then, just as he was putting his watch back into his pocket with a breath of relief, the door of the compartment suddenly was jerked open and, framed in the narrow opening, appeared the figure of a man of slight stature, with gray hair and bent shoulders. He peered curiously into the coach, and his eyes traveled quickly and with apparent indifference over the big frame of Caruthers. Then he stepped in and, with a slight nod to Caruthers, dropped a small handbag on the cushioned seat, pulled his soft wool hat over his eyes, sunk down in one corner of the compartment and thrust his hands deep into his trouser pockets.

Caruthers witnessed these movements with some satisfaction, and, after a glance or two at his companion, and an instant's look outside at the yellow lights which were flying by as the express gathered speed, he spread out his legs, pulled his coat up about his ears, and proceeded to make himself comfortable for the hundred and twenty-mile ride before him. Five minutes later he was sound asleep and making that fact unmistakable by the most tremendous snores.

But if Caruthers snored loudly, his brain was fully as active as were his lungs, and, for a time, he passed through a series of adventures in dreamland which were anything but unpleasant. Then, suddenly, he was transported from a delightful fantasy into what seemed to him to be an immense haberdasher's shop, where he found himself unceremoniously set down before a little old man, who insisted upon fitting around his neck a most prodigiously high and stiff collar.

Now, if there was anything against which Caruthers was for all time and most vehemently opposed, it was high collars, therefore he struggled hard to push away his tormentor and remove the objectionable neckpiece. But all to no purpose. To his surprise he found his arms weighted down as if with lead. His persecutor coolly continued to fit on the collar, and finally, having done this to his satisfaction, pushed over his head until the top edge of the collar cut into his neck and was choking him.

Caruthers used every endeavor to raise his arms, but in vain. Great drops of sweat seemed to drain down his face as he tugged at his invisible bonds, and all the time he felt the little old man passing his hands, which were plump and smooth, over his body, thrusting them now into his pockets, now inside his vest, and again pulling at his fingers.

All at once, however, even the desire for resistance left the dreamer, his sensations became dull, and he fell again into unbroken sleep.

His next sensation was when his eyes began to feel the light, and he slowly became aware of a dull, dead feeling in his arms, a fulness of the head, and a dry contraction of the throat. After a while he was sensible of the motion of his resting-place, and at last his eyes took in enough of what was about him to show him that this was no haberdasher's shop, but the inside of a railway carriage traveling at high speed, that there was no high collar about his neck, and that no little old man stood opposite him. But it was some time, nevertheless, before his brain became clear enough to appreciate that all he seemed to have gone through with lately was only a dream, and that he now was in the seven-forty-five express from London, and probably—how many hours on his journey?

He slipped his fingers into his waistcoat pocket for his watch. Then, with an exclamation of surprise, he raised himself quickly to his feet and somewhat weakly stood there, feeling for the handsome hunting case which he could find nowhere. It took him but a minute to realize this, and also that the gold cuff-buttons he had worn and his diamond scarf-pin were gone, and that a curious stone-studded ring had disappeared from the little finger of his left hand.

They all had gone; but where? A sudden recollection of the old, bent man who had been his traveling companion made him peer closely into the corner in which that figure had been curled when he last saw him. But the corner was empty now.

As Caruthers' glance moved quickly over the opposite seat, however, one object caught his eye. He picked it up. It was a handkerchief, innocent of any markings, but smelling strongly, as he instantly noticed, of chloroform. The pungent odor told Caruthers all he needed. It was a complete confirmation of the theory which had flashed upon him at the first. He had been robbed, and in all likelihood by the little old man who had been his companion.

Caruthers pressed his face against the window. He was familiar with the country through which the train was passing, and he soon saw where he was. The express was fifty miles out of the metropolis, and by schedule must have made a stop at R——, about ten miles back. It was there, he decided, that the thief had got out. The next stop would be made some twenty-five miles farther on, and he would have to wait until then to communicate the knowledge of his loss. So he arranged himself as comfortably as possible and began to consider how he could most quickly recover the articles which had been taken by the robber he had not thrown out of the window, and whether he could prevent the news of the robbery from spreading so that he should not receive the taunts of Toppy Russel, by telegraph or otherwise, upon this doubly trying experience.

As soon as the guard had opened the door of his carriage at the next station, half an hour later, Caruthers jumped down, and, dashing into the telegraph office, quickly despatched a statement of the facts to the chief of police at R——. His message offered a generous reward for the apprehension of the rascal and the recovery of the stolen articles, with the least possible publicity.

Two hours later, arrived at his destination, he left the train, took a hansom to police headquarters, and notified them that a despatch addressed in his name might be received there from R——. If such a despatch did come it was to be sent to the B—— hotel, he ordered. Then he was driven to the hotel, and, having engaged a room, turned in and quickly fell asleep.

It was seven o'clock in the morning when he was awakened by a knock on the door of his room, and a telegram was handed him. It was from the police at R——, and ran as follows:

"Have got thief, and recovered all articles. Thief disguised. Young man. Think he is old hand at business. Communicate at once."

Caruthers sent the servant double quick for a morning paper, and, having satisfied himself that the news of the robbery and of the capture of the thief had at least not gained circulation outside of R——, he dressed himself leisurely. Then he ate a comfortable breakfast, lit a cigar with the utmost satisfaction, and strolled down to police headquarters.

To his surprise he found another despatch from R—— awaiting him there. He read:

"Come and get me out of this. I was the old man who traveled with you and stole your things. I wanted to see you throw me out of the window. I acknowledge the corn. Come quickly. This confounded place is damp, and they won't believe my story.

"TOPPY."

In amazement, which rapidly gave way to laughter he could not restrain, Caruthers read the message a second time, and then he telegraphed to the chief of police at R——:

"Hold thief. Dangerous man. Pay no attention to his story. Be with you to-morrow. "G. CARUTHERS."

It was a woebegone and irate specimen which Caruthers saw when the "dangerous man" was led forth from a cell at the police station at R—— next day. But Caruthers smothered his laughter at the sight, smoothed Russel's wrath as far as possible by apologies, and, having paid the costs and fines which the police demanded that someone should pay, after his explanations, walked out of the station with his friend.

To this day, however, Toppy Russel has serious doubts as to Caruthers' statement that he "believed Russel's telegram a forgery;" and he awaits a chance to turn the tables on the man he "robbed."

HOW BOERS FOUGHT CANUCKS

they were only too glad to draw off. The way and the time they attacked us, they should have had everything, but we Canadians had our good name to keep, so we could not let Mr. Boer have it all his own way. They attacked us at noon just when we were forming camp and everything was in a mess. The first thing we knew was when a big 15-pounder dropped a shell just over the camp, and before we knew it we were surrounded and cut off from our advance party and our advance guard.

"There were 1,300 of us in the transport, and we were attacked by 2,000 Boers, so you see the odds we had against us. I am in "E" Squadron, and we were the rear guard, and got all cut up. The reason we got it so bad was we had just come out of a spruit from watering our horses, and were making for the camp when we were opened fire upon. Of course, we all scattered and got separated by the Mounted Infantry. There were twelve of us and Lt. Carruthers made a stand out on the open ground without a bit of shelter of any kind, so we just dropped on our stomachs and commenced to fire away. I was told off to hold the six horses that we had left, so was more exposed to the fire than any other of our party. While I was holding the horses, two of them got hit, for the Boers were firing at our horses just to get rid of them and then us. Then it was that I got hit in the right forearm, and while I was banging it, the horses got away, so then I just dropped on my stomach and fired away till I got hit in the hip, and then I drew the bolt out of my rifle and threw it away, for the Boers at that moment were rushing us, and were only about twenty yards away when I got hit.

STRIPPED THE WOUNDED.

"They passed over our little party and tried to rush the camp, but failed, and on the way back they took us prisoners, and stripped us wounded of all our clothes. They took my letters, prayer-book, and Testament you gave me, and, worst of all, they took my silver watch that father gave me years ago.

"All the beggars left me was a pair of pants and my shirt, and it was raining to beat the band at the time. Out of all our party there were only two that got off without being wounded. There were two killed, and the rest of us got hit, some severely and others just lightly.

"We were about seven hours under fire. The fight occurred about seventy miles east of Klerksdorp, on the road to Kimberley, at a place called Boschbolt.

"After I was wounded and carried to the waggon, I was attended to and left with only a coat over me. I laid there all night till morning, and then was put in an open waggon and taken to the Canadian Field Hospital, which was nine miles from the field of action. We were fixed up there, and left the following morning for Klerksdorp."

HARD RIDE TO HOSPITAL

"I will never forget the ride in those waggons, without any springs in them. The ride from the waggon to the Canadian hospital was the worst. When we started in the morning, it was raining, and it rained all day, and when we arrived there we were lying in water and nearly frozen. It took us from early morning till 11.30 p.m. to go the nine miles, and it seemed that the waggons went over every stone or ant hill that was on the veldt.

"We were wounded on Easter Monday and it was Friday before we arrived at Klerksdorp, and late on Saturday before we arrived at Johannesburg, where I am now, and resting very nicely. It will be a couple of months before I will get around again, and then, I do not know whether I will be invalided home or not.

"By the way, too much cannot be said of Dr. Roberts, and the rest of the Canadian Field Hospital staff. Every person speaks very high of them. Dr. Roberts did all he could for me, and if it were not for him I do not know how I should have fared."

THE BOERS HATE CANADIANS.

Trooper J. H. Bedbrook, son of Mr. E. J. Bedbrook, Mayor of Montreal West, writes to his father in regard to the fight at Klein Hart's River:

I understand it was reported to Lord Kitchener that we had all been captured, and it was so reported to headquarters, and it will only make Canadians at home feel a little prouder when they know that instead of surrendering, we gave De La Rey a whole lot more than he was ready for. From what I can gather, he thought he was up against some of the Imperial Yeomanry. These regiments are called the Boers' ammunition columns; they have been captured so often. The Boers simply hate the Canadians; they have met so many defeats at their hands, and the same remarks apply to all the colonial forces: the Boers hate them like prison. Going into action makes a fellow feel a little bit nervous at first, but when you get settled down to the business it does not bother one at all. I forgot all about shells and bullets just as soon as I got the range of the Boers, as although it is not altogether a thing to blow about, I don't mind telling you that I have several tacked on to my account, but they should not have got in the way. I hope by the time I write again—which may not be for a week or two, as we expect to move away from here at any time—that we will have had another go at De La Rey and square accounts with him. His casualties in our first engagement with him were about three hundred killed and wounded, and we may possibly do a little better for him in our next. One of De La Rey's officers told our ambulance doc. tor that it was the hottest scrap he had for eighteen months. Lord Kitchener was in our hospital to-day, and he told some of our wounded that he was prouder than ever of the Canadians, and our commanding officer said that he was proud of his command, and that we had upheld the reputation established by former contingents from Canada.

Items of Interest

Washington, May 23.—Another royal guest is to be presented to the New World, this time from Russia. The Grand Duke Boris, son of the Grand Duke Vladimir, brother to Alexander III, and uncle of the present Czar, will come to America as a private citizen on a tour of inspection of the world, and will arrive in Washington late in June. While at the capital the Grand Duke Boris will be the guest of the Russian Ambassador at the embassy. The arrival of the distinguished visitor will detain Count Cassini in this country until the middle of July, though it had been his purpose to leave for Europe in June. The Grand Duke Boris will be accompanied by only a small suite of officers and men. He is 25 years of age, a Colonel of infantry in the Russian Army and of a studious and scientific bent of mind.

Montreal, May 23.—Lieut. McCann and Trooper Pardice, two Canadians from Kingston, who have been members of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, returned from South Africa today. They saw plenty of fighting in the Eastern Transvaal, under command of General Stewart and both were wounded. When they left South Africa, things were still in a very unsettled condition, and there was no prospect of peace then. The Boers, after they are captured, generally admit they are glad to be out of the fighting, but the first chance of escape they get they take advantage of it, and soon get back to the fighting line again. Neither of them take any stock in the peace proposals. The Boers, they say, are probably at their old game again, and merely looking for a breathing spell. The Boers, they say, are a treacherous lot, and not to be depended on. They speak highly of South Africa as a country to settle in, and believe after the war that it will rapidly fill up.

Pittsburg, Pa., May 23—The anthracite coal strike is settling down to a dogged test of strength. On one side over 150,000 miners are idle, and living on accumulated funds of the union and assessments on other workingmen. These last are the great resources in a long strike. Men who are at work pay for the maintenance of those who are at work. This is a reason for distrusting the report that the bituminous miners will be called out. That would make three times as many mouths to fill and cut off the main source of sustenance. Miners of the two classes seldom strike at the same time. interruptions of earnings of invested capital. There is no question of mouths to fill there. The salaries of managers go on and the stockholders can not three meals a day without dividends.

But idle capital is economic waste, which prudent managers do their best to prevent. Supporting the coal companies are making their strike assessments also—with an important difference. The miners assess themselves; the coal companies assess the public.

The price of anthracite coal in New York has been raised $1 per ton. For the last three years the anthracite product has ranged about 50,000,000 tons. The amount marketed has been some millions less; so it is certain that there is a large accumulated stock, on which the companies will make several million dollars as it is sold. The advance will be maintained until all the loss of the strike has been made up and something more. The companies will lose nothing by the strike.

They gained through the stock market by the strike of 1900 far more than they lost by the 10 per cent advance conceded to the politicians. Chalers went down and there was a harvest of consolidations. The Erie bought the Pennsylvania Coal Company and large capitalists bought heavily of Erie, raising its stock 300 per cent a few months later. The Reading bought the Jersey Central and the Pennsylvania increased its Reading holdings. The Reading is the biggest coal road, but its stock has suffered no panic decline. Somebody has been buying heavily and it is reported that the Pennsylvania people intend to complete their amalgamation of interest with the Reading. No wonder the operators were obdurate.

See what a pitifully unequal struggle it is with the unions draining their savings and dividing their wages; with the idle, and the companies putting their share of the cost on the public and using the fall of stock to strengthen themselves by consolidation. What hope of success can the men have? Nothing can equalize the conditions of such a struggle as this, but the powerful enlistment of public opinion on the side of the strikers. There is no such thing in this case and it is not to be expected. The miners are underpaid or suffering. They have had 10 per cent increase and admit that the companies can pay no more at the present price of coal. They urge frankly that the price of coal to the people should be increased in order to pay them higher wages. This, it is said, cannot be done on account of the competition with the bituminous. The companies are doing it temporarily, to meet the expenses of the strike, but the men get no good out of this.

They are likely to get the worst of it all around, and the deplorable thing from their point of view is that they can blame no one but themselves. Most of them are ignorant and unreasoning. Again it must be said that the leaders have assumed a grave responsibility.

Aid For Martinique Sufferers

Special to The Times.

Chicago, Ill, May 23.—The relief fund for the Martinique sufferers will be increased by many hundreds of dollars as a result of the mammoth theatrical benefit held at McVicker's Theatre this afternoon. The affair was one of the largest of its kind ever seen in Chicago. All the prominent players now appearing in the city contributed their services and their efforts were rewarded by the applause of a fashionable audience that packed the house from the parquet to the topmost gallery, and overflowed into the aisles and foyer.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

—hold me close in your arms, Hetty, and promise," she sobbed. "If you turn against me I shall die at your feet. Oh, for the love of heaven, Hetty, promise!"

"I promise, dear," replied Hetty, in growing terror; but her voice was quite steady as she gathered the slim figure into her arms and drew the golden head to her shoulder.

"Now, Daisy," she said, soothingly, "you can tell me all."

"My terrible secret and my bitter woe all dated from the day you and Olive went on that visit to Briarvale, and left me alone with papa and Margy at the farm. Do you remember that time, Hetty?"

"Yes," replied Hetty, "I remember."

"Will you look back and recall how I pleaded to go with you, but you would not take me; and, oh, Hetty, by leaving me you wrecked my life, for on the first day I was left alone, I met the man who was to lead me down to my doom—and that man was Harold St. John."

"Recollect I was only sixteen then, Hetty—an ignorant, dreaming child, who knew as little of the men and women in the great world beyond the farm as the yellow butterflies that coquetted with the nodding roses in our little garden.

"He looked so handsome, he made himself so agreeable that, without scarcely knowing I was making an appointment, I promised that I would see him the next afternoon at the brookside.

"He was there waiting for me, and he greeted me so warmly that I confess my foolish girl heart fluttered. He was a man of the world—he could see that I was unused to attentions and easily flattered.

"We met again and again, and no one ever knew save the bright-eyed birds that looked silently down from their leafy coverts. He made me understand that the brightness of the world had begun for him when he saw my face first.

"Suddenly quite a strange idea took possession of me; what a glorious revenge it would be upon you and Olive to find, when you returned, that the child whom you had left because I was not old enough, and not stylish enough to take to Briarvale, was capable of attracting a handsome lover.

"For two weeks I saw Harold St. John each day, and the whole world changed for me. I began to look forward, when I parted from him, to the time I should see him again.

"I could not see his faults — I thought him charming. I imagined he was the Prince Charming sent to me—just as that other prince had been sent to poor little, hapless Cinderella, who had been left behind by her cruel sisters.

"At length the end came; I told him I could meet him no more.

"'Do you really mean it?' he asked, looking at me, pale with emotion, and coming nearer me.

"'Yes,' I answered. 'They would forbid me to see you, I am sure, if—if they knew—my relatives, I mean.'

"'You would not like that?' he asked, eagerly.

"And I confessed that I would not indeed.

"'If you care for me, we can remedy all that,' he said hurriedly. 'You can be mine, and no one can part us. Do you love me well enough to marry me, my darling?'

"I shrank back in affright, no such thought as marrying any one had come to me. I was so young the very idea bewildered me. He saw it.

"I cannot tell you how he pleaded with me— how he persuaded me, Hetty—telling me that he would take the revolver he carried from his breast pocket and shoot himself if I refused

"I prayed him not to do that.

"'Then marry me, my darling,' he said, 'for I cannot live without you.

"Listen, Hetty— over persuaded, talked into the belief that it was love I felt for him, I yielded.

"'There is no time like the present, my dear,' he said; 'we will be married at once in the little stone church on the brow of the hill yonder. It will be quite a lark. After the ceremony is over I will bring you to your relatives, and we will be forgiven.'

"Against my better judgment, though I was only a child, I yielded, Hetty."

A low cry of horror broke from Hetty's lips.

"Do not interrupt me, Hetty," cried Daisy, sobbing piteously, "let me tell all while I have the strength."

"Ah, heaven pity me! I went with him to the old stone church; and there at the dim altar the words were spoken which bound your unhappy sister to Harold St. John while life lasts, or death sets one or the other free.

"But at the church door he deserted me. Hetty, it appears that he had mistaken me from the first for Lillian Rathven, the heiress. That was how the mistake occurred in making out the marriage license he had brought with him, and that was the name the clergyman called me when he asked me if I would take the man by my side for better or for worse.

"When we had left the church and were out in the starlight, I asked him why I had been called Lillian Rathven. Then the whole terrible truth came out. I fainted away from the shock, and he deserted me then and there— left me lying face downward in the long grass to live or to die, as heaven saw fit."

CHAPTER XLI.

"Father I am the one."

"When I awoke to consciousness, Hetty," continued Daisy, "I found myself at home, with papa bending over me. He had started out to search for me, and had found me lying there.

"I dared not tell him what had happened, and all that night I suffered a terror of torture, expecting Harold St. John to return and claim me.

"You know the rest, Hetty, how you and Olive returned home and the startling story you told of the man who had been arrested at Briarvale, that he was an escaped forger whom they recaptured and had sent him to Sing Sing to pay the penalty of his crime by ten long years' imprisonment.

"How I lived through the months that followed you well remember. I faded away so fast you thought I was [illegible]

Harold St. John. I had learned to despise him at the church door—it was for fear, for shame, and agony at what I had done— it was a rash marriage, and I would have my whole life to repent for it.

"My only solace was— for ten long years he could not claim me— that was a great while out of a lifetime.

"Then Aleck came," pursued Daisy, "and you know full well, Hetty, not knowing my terrible secret how he wooed me, and I— God help me, I learned to love him with all the strength of my heart, then I knew what true love really meant.

"And when he asked me to marry him, Hetty, I almost died with grief and remorse. I knew Aleck must be nothing to me, and I learned to love him— too late.

"Then, in the stillness of my room one night a bitter temptation came to me; I had already taken one step in the wrong path, could another matter much? I had already wrecked my life —why not take a few years' happiness out of it by marrying Aleck, and when the dreaded ten years were

Anecdotal.

It is recorded of Mr. W. S. Gilbert that on hearing of the title of Henry Arthur Jones' new play, "The Princess's Nose," he remarked, "I hope it may run long."

United States Senator Hoar received word the other day that a friend, who had been supposed to have appendicitis, was suffering not from that ailment, but from acute indigestion. "That is good news," said the Senator. "I rejoice that the trouble lies in the table of contents rather than in the appendix."

Samuel Rogers, the poet, told of an Englishman and a Frenchman who had to fight a duel. That they might have a better chance of missing one another, they were to fight in a dark room. The Englishman fired up the chimney and brought down the Frenchman! "When I tell this story in Paris," added Rogers, "I put the Englishman up the chimney."

James G. Blaine used to tell this story: Once in Dublin, toward the end of the opera, Satan was conducting Faust through a trap-door which represented the gates of Hades. His Majesty got through all right—he was used to going below—but Faust, who was quite stout, got only about halfway in, and no squeezing would get him any farther. Suddenly an Irishman in the gallery exclaimed, devoutly, "Thank God, hell is full."

When Moses Coit Tyler, the celebrated professor of history at Cornell, was an instructor at the University of Michigan, he had charge of a class in English that assembled at 8 o'clock a.m. One raw February morning at roll-call, he read the name of "Mr. Robbins," a member of the class, without getting an answer. "Mr. Robbins," he repeated in a slightly louder voice. Still no reply. "Ah," said the instructor, with a quiet smile, "come to think of it, it is rather early for robins."

Once during a heated debate between Senator Joseph B. Foraker, of Ohio, and Senator Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas, the question of law in Texas and law in Ohio came up. The passage became warm. Foraker, by way of a parting shot, told Bailey that if he would come to Ohio he would learn a great deal of law that he did not know. "If there is so very much law to be learned in Ohio," remarked Bailey, "I must advise the Senator to spend all his spare time there. He needs it."

A somewhat apocryphal anecdote of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is going the rounds of the United States press. During the last general elections, it is related, a Quebec Liberal, whose acquaintance with Sir Wilfrid was only political, sent this telegram to his leader, who was in Ontario on a speech-making tour: "Report in circulation in this county that your children have not been baptized. Telegraph denial." To which despatch the Premier sent this reply: "Sorry to say report is correct. I have no children."

Dr. MacNamara, in his collection of child stories, tells one concerning that wonderful dream of Jacob's and the angels going up the ladder to Heaven. "Please, sir," asked one of the boys in the class to which the story was being rehearsed, "why did the angels want to go up the ladder when they had wings?" This nonplussed the teacher, who took a strategic movement to the rear by saying, "Ah, yes! Why? Perhaps one of the boys can answer that." And one did. "Please, sir," said he, "because they was a-moulting."

Thomas A. Edison is deaf, but, like many whose hearing is defective, he sometimes understands what is said when it is least expected. There were visitors one day at his laboratory, to whom, as usual, he was polite, although busy, and he patiently answered many questions unnecessarily shouted at him. Finally, one of the visitors, the humorist of the party, said to another: "I bet he'd hear if we ask him to have a drink." "Yes," said Edison, looking directly at the man and smiling, "I would; but no, thank you, not to-day."

The late Lord Dufferin was fond of relating an amusing experience which occurred when he was returning to Ireland from a diplomatic mission to be married, and his engagement to the beautiful Miss Hamilton had just been announced. He landed one evening on the platform of a small country station near Clandeboye, and hired a driver to take him the four or five miles, but he was so muffled up that the driver failed to recognize him. Presently Lord Dufferin asked: "Any news about here?" "No news," grumpily replied the man, "except that the beautiful Miss Hamilton is going to marry that ugly fellow, Dufferin!"

Mrs. Smith—I reckon our Jane has got a first-rate husband.

Mrs. Brown—Well, you ought to be thankful.

Mrs. Smith—I hope I am, 'Gusty. Of course, he isn't much to look at, and he ain't over smart; but there's one thing, and that is he's saving. Why, the very first day after the marriage he told Jane she'd better let him take the engagement ring back and get the money returned. He said there was no longer any use for her to wear it now that she was married.—Boston Transcript.

—The first trackless trolley line goes to Franklin, N.H. The cars will run on a fine stretch of macadam. In place of the ordinary overhead conductor, two wires stretched on poles on either side of the road will serve to transmit the electricity. From these wires the current will be conveyed to a car by means of two poles extending out from the car's sides. The poles to be hung in such a way that the car can, if need be, deviate laterally from the regular course a distance of ten feet. In order for two cars to pass each other it will only be necessary for the motorman of one of them to remove his trolley poles from the wires for a moment, or until the other car goes past.

Long Service Medals

Lt.-Col. Edwards has received long service medals for the following members of the 57th: Sergt. W. F. Green, Sergt. F. Sharpe, Ptes. A. Blade, R. Mein, J. Crowe and J. A. Harper.

OBITUARY

The death occurred on Sunday at the residence of Mr. J. C. Sims, 7?? Water street, of Ann Brown, aged 92 years. Death was due to old age. The deceased was a native of County Cavan, Ireland, and came to this country when quite young. The funeral will take place from the residence of Mr. Sims, this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The remains will be interred in Little Lake Cemetery.

June Canadian Magazine

The leading article in the June Canadian Magazine is a lengthy, but vivacious sketch of King Edward VII and his Consort. This is illustrated with handsome photographs of their Majesties. One striking page gives four pictures of the King at various ages, showing the peculiar phases through which, in a life time, each human countenance passes.

STONY LAKE ITEMS

Mr. Rupert Donell has had the "Mayflower" put in first class shape again for the season, and made her first run of the season to Stony Lake on the 24th. The launch looks trimmer than ever. Mr. and Mrs. Donell, Miss Donell, Miss Pearl Faint, Miss Alice Donell and Mr. Rupert Donell went up for the holiday.

THE ELECTION RETURN

The Times Will Display the Returns on the Market Square

The Times has made a contract with the C.P.R. Telegraph Company for full election returns on Thursday night. A special wire will be placed in the Times office, and the returns will be taken hot from the wire as they come in and displayed on a sheet of white canvas 800 square feet in size, by lime light. The whole market square will be available for the great crowd that is sure to be on hand.

The Times is Peterborough's brightest and best daily newspaper, and its issue of Friday will contain the complete election returns of the Province.

We expect fully ten thousand persons on the market square on Thursday night.

The returns will start to come in about eight o'clock, and will continue until about midnight.

Returned from the Coast

The Monetary Times says: "It is agreeable to learn, as we do from Mr. E. W. Cox, general manager of the Canada Life, who has been as far west as the coast, that everywhere the prospects for business are good. Some portions of British Columbia excepted, things are 'humming' out west, as they are with us more staid folks in the East. Mr. Cox's errand was the inspection of his company's Western agencies, and he is encouraged to believe that they will have a larger amount of new insurance, even, than they had last year.

Over the Dam

On Sunday last a young dry goods clerk and a companion, forgetting the apostolic injunction to remember the Sabbath day, boarded a canoe and proceeded down the lake for a sail. Arriving at the locks one of the young men got out while the other proceeded to give an exhibition of expert canoemanship. During his evolutions the craft swung out into the current and was swept over the dam. The occupant of the boat was fired head first into the wet, damp water, while the canoe went sailing down stream on its own hook. The sailor fortunately was able to swim and managed to make shore when he was assisted up the bank to a place of safety. After catching his wind he started, by back alleys and byways, to the Munro House, where he boards, and put to bed until his nether garments dried. Later on the canoe was returned to the owner, considerably the worse of the wear.

MARK ST. EPWORTH LEAGUE

Rev. Jos. Kilgour Addresses the League Last Evening

A very instructive and pleasant hour was spent last evening by the members of the Epworth League of Mark st. church, when the Rev. Jos. Kilgour gave one of his well known and delightful lectures on the Book of Daniel.

The answers which were given by Mr. Kilgour to the different and varied questions which were propounded to him, showed his thorough acquaintance with the scriptures and his broad knowledge of biblical history. The ground of the prophecy which called forth interrogation was well covered, satisfactory and decisive, answers being given showing the careful study and deep learning of the speaker. Mr. Kilgour tries to give the best thoughts of the best thinkers that he can avail himself of—a fact which should appeal strongly to our young people, who should ever be anxious to improve their knowledge of Christ's kingdom. A plainer book than the Bible on moral matters could not be written and our ministers are laboring to make it more so, and in face of these facts are we profiting and growing in grace as we should be? It is because of your ignorance that we trifle. If we could only see the end how differently we would live? Let us therefore have the strength of God in the struggle of life.

The chair was occupied by Rev. C. L. Thompson, pastor, who assisted materially in the enjoyment of that evening, by the clear and concise manner in which he presented the matters for discussion.

ABOUT THE CORONATION

To the Editor of The Times:—

Dear Sir—It was with mingled feelings of surprise and amazement that I read the announcement in Friday's papers that an Englishman had been chosen to represent the 57th Regt. in the Coronation Contingent. Surely this must be a mistake, or is it possible that we have not in the 57th Regt. a native born Canadian who possesses the necessary qualification and physique "without padding." It seems to be the unanimous opinion that a blunder has been made, and it is up to someone to explain, perhaps the officers of the regiment can enlighten us. If an outsider can be hired to "join the Regt. and in a couple of years square himself to get the plum, where is the incentive to the younger members of the Regt. to take an interest in it. Thanking you Mr. Editor,

I am
CANADIAN.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring In and Around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either phoned or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Rev. Father Phelan, of Young's Point, was in town yesterday on business.

—Mr. R. N. Bell, of the Ontario Bank, spent the day in Toronto with his parents, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. R. W. Bell.

—Miss Kate Campbell and her cousin Sunday in Tweed, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Garrett.

—Mr. and Mrs. H. Woodruffe, and their little daughter, Miss Marguerite, were in town over Sunday, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Nugent.

—Mrs. W. H. Hooper and little daughter Miss Erma, accompanied by Miss Eva Byers, of Pontypool, spent the holidays in town.

—Bishop O'Connor conducted confirmation services in St. Mary's church, Grafton last Sunday. About 60 were received into the church.

Saturday's Mail and Empire: Miss Hamilton, of Peterborough, is in town for the races, and is one of Mr. Seagram's party. They are guests at the Queen's Hotel.

—Mr. N. D. Chambers, accompanied by two friends, Messrs. Whiteside and Macdonald, of the Heintzman Piano Co., Toronto, spent Sunday in town, the guest of his sister, Miss Chambers, Water st.

—Mr. Ed. J. Roy, Napanee, son of our esteemed fellow townsman, Mr. R. M. Roy, is in town on a visit to his parents. Mr. Roy is manager of the Dominion Rock Drill and Foundry Co., Limited, of Napanee.

The Times had a call yesterday from Mr. Wm. C. Benson, of the firm of Wm. C. Benson & Co., real estate and financial agents, London, Ontario. Mr. Benson's firm is one of the reputable and responsible financial institutions of the country and does a large business in first class mining and other securities. Mr. Benson is appointing agents in various centres to handle his stocks, and hopes to secure a responsible representative in Peterborough while here. He will probably leave for the west tomorrow.

Hundreds Won for Christ

Evangelist H. D. Kennedy, of town, who for the past few years has been engaged in evangelistic work throughout Ontario, has, during the last year, had the most successful year of his life. He left Peterborough the first of last July and has been constantly at work, chiefly in the Toronto conference, ever since, and upwards of six hundred have been converted in his meetings. At present he is at Ahmic Harbor where he will close shortly. Mr. Kennedy expects to spend a few days then in town, and will attend the Toronto Conference in June, and go from there to the Algoma district to hold meetings for three months. He has had a call to California for eight weeks work in the fall. At Parry Sound in March over one hundred professed Christ. The following is an extract which appeared in the Parry Sound North Star during Mr. Kennedy's visit there: "Evangelist Kennedy's sermons in the Methodist Church are attracting much attention. Throughout the town great interest prevails. True zeal, honest conviction and living sympathy breathe forth from every sermon, and many are being won for Christ. The preacher's style is earnest, pleasing and effective. In delineation of the great historic characters and events of the Jewish race his gifts are notable. Few preachers or religious teachers uncover so much in these ever interesting stories. Every sermon is instructive and helpful."

SPORTS, CONTINUED.

FIELD DAY OF SPORTS.

The T. A. S. Athletic club will have a field day of sports on the 1st of July. Their picnic held in former years on that date will be done away with and the T.A.S. athletic association will furnish a programme of sports for the occasion. A lacrosse match will be played with an outside team, and a big day's sport is expected.

BASEBALL.

On Saturday a game of ball was played between the Royal Canadians and the Coal Heavers, a local combination. The rain interfered with the play and the match was called off in Peterborough's seventh. Mr. Fred. Whitcroft umpired the game to the satisfaction of all.

The result was as follows:

Royal Canadians ... —0006010—7 4 1
Peterborough ....—000000x—0 2 4

Batteries—Stoney and Greer, Earle and Graham.

THE KING LABORS HARD TO BRING ABOUT PEACE

Working Actively in Promoting Negotiations for Ending the Boer War

London, May 28.—There is no longer doubt but that the developments in the South African situation will lead to peace.

One of the strongest influences tending in that direction is the active participation in negotiation by the King.

A member of the Government said to-day: "Everything is practically settled, and the war is practically at an end. It may be, however, that several weeks will elapse before a definite announcement can be made. We want to give the Boer leaders every chance in their conferences with their followers and, that takes time."

The main points of difference referred to in the Cabinet meeting were as to fixing a time for the establishing of Boer autonomy, the immediate restoring of constitutional rights to the Dutch in Cape Colony, the using of the cable to consult the Boer leaders in Holland as the formal embodying of the terms ultimately agreed upon in an instrument signed by both parties.

The British Cabinet had already refused to consent to the first three of these proposals, but from hints let fall from Ministerial quarters it is probable that counter proposals affording a basis for a compromise were forwarded.

Colonial Secretary Chamberlain remained in London at the King's request to communicate all the news immediately on arrival. The King wants peace at almost any cost, and it is now known that the overtures from Lord Kitchener which induced the Boer leaders to come in were the result of determined pressure by the King on an unwilling Cabinet.

If it is peace it will be the King's peace, and the King has signified his desire to make known personally to the nation the result of the negotiation if favorable. Probably it would be a message to both Houses of Parliament.

POPE TO CARDINAL GIBBONS

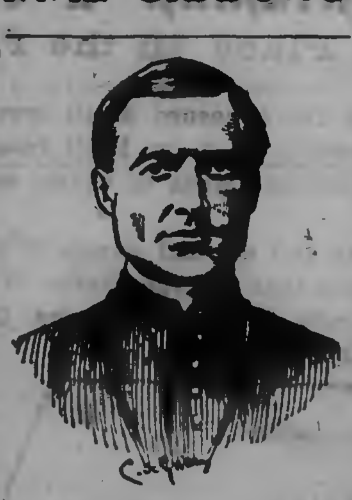
The Vaticans Attitude Toward the United States Made Clear



CARDINAL GIBBONS.

Special to The Times.

Rome, May 28.—Leo XIII's letter to Cardinal Gibbons on the Pope's conduct in regard to the United States is the keystone of the Papal American policy. At the time of Prince Henry of Prussia's too pompous and yet fruitless journey, I pointed out clearly the continuity of the Roman policy. Leo XIII. first, alone for a long time, before the flatteries of Germany, the advances of England and the literary and commercial pilgrimages of France to Washington, foresaw the expansion of the starry flag, co-operated with the United States, and placed his forces and his valuable aid in the service of unification. The Pope has not wearied of his watchful and helpful constancy. In vain did rivalry and dissension within the bosom of the Church itself picture the downfall of his plans—Leo XIII. remained unmoved.

To-day's letter continues his mission and brings out prominently the permanent bond. "If at the very beginning of our supreme pontificate," he says, "we were moved with great joy in looking at the situation of your country, now, having held this office for more than twenty-four years, we must admit that at no moment has that early joy been diminished, but that, on the contrary, it has grown more and more from day to day, in proportion as the progress of the Catholic faith among your people became more marked. This must be attributed in the first place to the will of God, but it is also due to your zeal and to your exertions. We must, in fact, congratulate your wisdom in that, knowing well the character of the nation, you have been able to promote prudently all kinds of Catholic institutions in accordance with the minds and the peculiarities of the people."

There is condensed a placid page of history, and at the same time an inestimable tribute. We are far from the days when narrow minds and misled Continentals tried to create a sort of conflict between Rome and America. "Americanism!" they said, "there is the danger. Americanism, that is the new mask of schism and of heresy." Americanism was naturalism, rationalism, the sum total of all bad isms. The second letter explains and throws light on the first to Cardinal Gibbons: "A long experience," the Pope goes on to say, "obliges us to admit that, thanks to your efforts, we have found among your compatriots docile minds and ardent souls, showing that they were ready to meet our desires. So, while almost all other nations which for many successive centuries have professed the Catholic religion have undergone painful evolutions and vicissitudes, the state of your church is, on the contrary, possessing, so to speak, blooming youth, delights our minds and fills them with joy. It is true, the civil government grants us no legal favors, but the heads of the Republic undoubtedly deserve the praise that they refuse us no just liberty."

In this letter we have the confirmation of the spirit that made Leo XIII. dictate his first letter on Americanism. At the beginning, in the middle and at the end of the document the Holy Father had taken perspicacious care in distinguishing between the true American Americanism and the false continental "Americanism" grafted on abstractions and on borrowed ideas that had become caricatures. While passions were inflamed The Sun made the distinction and showed the inevitable differences.

Ever since that episode Leo XIII. has steadily laid weight on the interpretation that was misunderstood at first. To-day's letter is the last link in the golden chain; its originality as a religious act emphasizes its importance, for is not this letter the only one that Leo XIII. has written in reply to the congratulations for his jubilee?

This is an adroit preface for the negotiations which will be undertaken with the Holy See by President Roosevelt's Philippines Commission when it stops over at the Vatican a few days from now. It emphasizes the spirit of the relations, and their glad co-operations. Mr. Taft, Mgr. O'Gorman, Mr. Smith and the Secretary of the Mission will be received at Rome as the envoys of Napoleon and of Bismark were received in former days. At the moment when dynasties and governments are courting the United States, the United States call upon the Vatican. That is only right. The first assistant was the Pope. His is the honor of having betimes crossed the Atlantic.

The Italian Senate has given us a show, the furious fight between Gen. Pelloux, the late Minister, and Signor Giolitti, who is now in power. The leader of the opposition reproached the Cabinet with destroying the monarchy by its alliance with the Republicans and Socialists, just as earlier the radicals accused the conservatives of endangering institutions by their spirit of reaction. The Chamber accorded the Minister a majority of only five votes. That isn't much. But the importance of the incident is in the dilemma in which the House of Savoy is placed. If it relies on the Right it risks being overthrown; if it leans upon the Left it hastens toward suicide. It is a strange fate.

Seattle Terminal for Asiatic Line

Special to The Times

Seattle, Wash., May 28.—The Great Northern Railway company has decided to make this city the chief eastern terminal of its great line of Atlantic steamships. It is said, unofficially but on reliable authority, that the Hill interests intend building up a large transcontinental, transpacific, coastwise and local trade. Several small steamships already have been purchased to engage in the local and Puget Sound trade. The two great ocean freighters, now under course of construction, in a short time will be ready to place on the run between this city and Asiatic ports.

Gotham Welcomes French Visitors

Special to The Times.

New York, May 28.—The distinguished French visitors who came over to attend the dedication of the Rochambeau monument arrived in New York this afternoon and receive a welcome that could not fail but leave a pleasant memory. The party landed at the Battery and were escorted by Squadron A and other military organizations to the City Hall, where the visitors were welcomed by Mayor Low. They then proceeded to the Waldorf-Astoria, where the Mayor returned the visits, and the delegation, headed by M. Cambon, received the French residents of the city. This evening the visitors are to be the guests of the Society of the Cincinnati at dinner at the Metropolitan club.

Special to The Times.

Buffalo, N.Y., May 28.—General Brugere and his fellow members of the French mission to the Rochambeau dedication visited Niagara Falls to-day. The visitors reached Buffalo shortly after 8 o'clock this morning and before leaving for the Falls a visit was paid to the City Hall where the party was received and welcomed by Mayor Knight and a committee of representative citizens. The afternoon was spent in viewing the Falls and at 4 p.m. the party left over the New York Central for West Point.

Turning Down the Doctors.

The marvellous cures of Catarrhozone are being much talked about. Thousands are daily recognizing the exceptional merit of this simple inhaler treatment, and instead of running to the doctor with their winter ills they protect themselves by Catarrhozone; it kills colds in the head in ten minutes, quickly relieves catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, lung troubles, and cures even though all other remedies have failed. Catarrhozone is very pleasant, safe and convenient to use. Its best recommendation is its enormous sale; try it to-day. Price $1.00, small size 25c., at druggists.

GREAT BRITAIN'S REPLY SENT BY THE GOVERNMENT TO PRETORIA

The Budget Debate Adjourned to Avoid Any Discussion Of Peace

Special to The Times.

London, May 27.—The British Cabinet was in session for two hours today, discussing the communications received from Pretoria since the meeting of the Ministers on Friday last. It is understood that the inner committee of the Cabinet will telegraph the result of the deliberations to Pretoria this afternoon. The Boer delegates at the Transvaal capital will then probably return to Vereeniging and report to the burghers, who are still assembled there.

A. J. Balfour, the Government leader made no statement in the House of Commons today in regard to the peace negotiations but he announced a postponement of the discussion of the budget, fixed for this week, remarking that it would be very inconvenient to debate the budget "while there were other things in the balance."

Mr. Balfour subsequently explained that it would be impossible in discussing the budget to prevent references to the peace negotiations.

New York to Greet French Visitors.

New York, May 28.—Everything is in readiness for the welcome in New York to-morrow of the distinguished members of the French mission who came over to attend the unveiling of the Rochambeau monument. The party will land at the Battery at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and will be escorted to the City Hall, where the visitors will be welcomed by Mayor Low. For the remainder of their stay in the metropolis the entertainment programme provides for reception at the Waldorf-Astoria, a banquet at the Metropolitan Club, a visit to Grant's Tomb, followed by a luncheon at Claremont, and a dinner at Sherry's together with several private functions of an elaborate character.

CLOSE TO RODDAM WRECK

One of the Grandest and at the Same Time Most Horrible Sights Ever Witnessed—The Great Tidal Wave

Wilmington, Del., May 27.—The British steamship Whitgrift, commanded by Captain Charles Whymper, arrived here this afternoon fresh from the zone of the volcanic eruptions in the West Indian Islands. On May 16 she touched at St. Lucia, 49 miles from Martinique. The Captain says that when he left St. Lucia the people were in a state of panic, and many of the women and children were being removed to places of supposed safety. Business was considerably interfered with, as the people were in dread of a volcanic eruption on that island.

The Whitgrift's hull is scarred and rusty, and gray volcanic dust is still clinging to her spars and decks.

"Of Martinique itself I only got a distant view," says Captain Whymper. "We gave the island a wide berth, yet we passed within three miles, near enough to see that the work of destruction was complete.

"We had been sailing over smooth seas until we approached within 40 miles of St. Pierre. Then the sea was lashed into fury and our heavily-laden ship was tossed about as a cork. Martinique lay toward the northeast. A dense mass of smoke hid the island. Mont Pelee was sending up dense volumes of smoke, dust, fire and stones. When the wind blew the smoke away we could see no signs of habitation. Everything had been destroyed.

"For nearly one hundred miles dust fell thickly. It took us a day to pass through it.

"I passed under the stern of the Roddam. It was the most abject wreck I ever saw afloat. Her spars, funnels and upper works were gone. What little woodwork remained was charred and blackened. Eighteen of her men were lying dead on the decks."

Captain Whymper says he saw Captain Chas. Freeman, of the boat, lying in the hospital, and fears that he will never be able to be about again.

At the Barbadoes the Captain met Samuel A. McAllister, of this city, the United States Consul, who is helping to relieve the surviving inhabitants of the stricken island.

St. Thomas, D.W.I., May 27.—Captain Braastad, of the Norwegian steamer, which is here, says:

"We arrived at Fort de France on May 15. When nearing the port we saw a smoke cloud overhanging the island and passed many swollen corpses. At 5 o'clock in the morning of May 20 a tidal wave parted the Helga's hawsers and the steamer went adrift, but was brought to anchor quickly. There was a heavy fall of volcanic matter and the tidal waves recurred rapidly. We sailed for St. Lucia in the afternoon with a number of refugees on board. Passing St. Pierre in the morning of May 22, we found that Mont Pelee was emitting heavy clouds of smoke."

Captain Braastad has in his possession a stone weighing several pounds which fell on the deck of his steamer.

Washington, D. D., May 27.—Consul Ayme cabled the State Department from Martinique to-day saying the Admiral of the French flagship Tage has advised him that sufficient supplies to meet the needs of the people of the island for four months are on hand, and suggesting that no further supplies are needed. The American warships now in the French and British West Indies will doubtless be left there so long as they can be of service, and until danger of further serious disasters on Martinique and St. Vincent are passed.

On the morning of May 20, from 4.07 to 4.16 Eastern time, or 5.03 to 5.12 St. Pierre local mean time, there occurred a slight disturbance of the magnetic needles at the Coast and Geodetic Survey magnetic observatory at Cheltenham, Md., beginning abruptly and reaching its maximum effect at 5.07. From 11.57 p.m., May 20, to 0.09 a.m., Eastern time, or from 0.53 to 1.05 a.m., May 21, St. Pierre local mean time, a similar but somewhat larger disturbance occurred.

According to the cable despatch from Fort de France, dated Tuesday, May 20, the second eruption of Mont Pelee apparently began about 5.15 a.m., closely coincident with the first magnetic disturbance given above.

Respecting the second magnetic disturbance, about midnight of May 20, it is of interest to note that almost continuous earthquake shocks were felt at St. Augustine, Fla., from 9 to midnight, May 02.

Paris, May 27.—The Russian Minister of Finance, M. Witte, in behalf of the Russian Government, has telegraphed 250,000 francs to the Martinique Relief Fund.

The Emperor of Japan has subscribed 10,000 francs to the Martinique Relief Fund.

Roseau, Island of Dominica, B.W.I., May 27.—During the whole of last night ashes from the volcano on the island of Martinique fell here in greater quantity than ever experienced since the outbreak of Mont Pelee.

A Scientist's Report.

Port de France, May 26.—Professor Robert T. Hill, United States Government geologist and head of the expedition sent by the National Geographical Society, has just come in from a daring and prolonged investigation of the volcanic activity in Martinique. Professor Hill chartered a steamer and carefully examined the coast as far north as Port de Macouba, at the extreme end of the island, making frequent landings. After landing at Le Precheur, five miles north of St. Pierre, he walked through an area of active volcanism to the latter place and made a minute examination of the various phenomena disclosed.

Professor Hill is the first and only man who has set foot in the area of craters, fissures, and fumaroles, and, because of his high position as a scientist, his narrative is valuable. In addition to his work of investigation, the professor rescued in his steamer many poor people who had ventured back after deserting their homes and found themselves in awful danger.

Three Zones.

He reports as follows: The zone of the catastrophe in Martinique forms an elongated oval, containing, on land, about eight square miles of destruction. This oval is partly over the sea. The land part is bounded by lines running from Le Precheur to the peak of Mont Pelee, then curving around to Carbet. There were three well marked zones, first a centre of annihilation, in which all life, vegetable and animal, was utterly destroyed; the greater northern portion of St. Pierre was in this zone. Second, a zone of singeing, blistering flame, which also was fatal to all life, killing all men and animals, burning the leaves on the trees, and scorching, but not utterly destroying, the trees themselves. Third, a large outer, non-destructive zone, of ashes, wherein some vegetation was injured. The focus of annihilation was the new crater midway between the sea and the peak of Mont Pelee where now exists a new area of active volcanism, with hundreds of fumaroles or miniature volcanoes.

Vomiting Black, Hot Mud.

The new crater is now vomiting black, hot mud, which is falling into the sea. Both craters, the old and new, are active. Mushroom-shaped steam explosions constantly ascend from the old crater, while heavy, ash-laden clouds float horizontally from the new crater. The old ejecta, steam, smoke, mud, pumice, and lapilli, but no molten lava.

The salient topography of the region is unaltered. The destruction of St. Pierre was due to the new crater. The explosion had great superficial force, acting in radial directions as is evidenced by the dismounting and carrying for yards the guns in the battery on the hill south of St. Pierre and the colonial statue of the Virgin in the same locality and also by the condition of the ruined houses in St. Pierre.

According to the testimony of some persons there was an accompanying flame. Others think the incandescent cinders and the force of their ejection were sufficient to cause the destruction. This must be investigated. I am now following the nature of this hill.

This is the first, positive scientific statement based on observed facts. Prof. Hill has now started on horseback for the volcano. He will study the whole affected area, and will try to get to both craters. He will surely visit Morne Rouge and the slope of Mont Pelee. The undertaking is very hazardous, as explosions may occur at any moment, as one did May 20. Prof. Hill knows the risk he takes, but says the only way to discover exactly what has happened is to go to the crater itself or as nearly as possible.

New Source of Fright.

Fort de France is nearly deserted. A new source of fright is fear that a tidal wave may come. A wave eight feet high would certainly destroy Fort de France, and probably cause enormous loss of life.

The weather is lowering and rainy. The south winds carry the smoke and ashes from the volcano away from Fort de France.

In order to avoid a possible epidemic among the seven thousand refugees now at Fort de France it has been decided to distribute them among a number of depots.

British Mule Shipments Stopped

New Orleans, La., May 28.—Despite the fact that President Roosevelt found that there was no violation of neutrality in the British mule shipments from Chalmette, La., to South Africa, the shipments are to stop and the employees of the British Government who are here will go to Mexico and Canada.

There is a persistent report to the effect that the British Government received a "private tip" from the Washington Administration to stop the shipments from this country.

The Agonizing Pains of Rheumatism.

A blotched, pimply, disfigured face, feeling of exhaustion, wracked nerves, headache and a dull brain. The proper cure is one Ferrozone tablet after each meal. Ferrozone clears and beautifies the complexion by making rich, pure blood. It restores the enfeebled brain and unstrung nerves to a healthy, vigorous condition. It invigorates all the physical and mental powers, and brings strength and ambition to the depressed. Refuse a substitute for Ferrozone—it's the best tonic, rebuilder and invigorator known. TO STIR UP GREAT HOSTILITY

Using Steamship Deal to Stir Up Hostility—London Press Now Alive to the Situation—Reaction Follows—Revolution in Diplomacy on Commercial Lines

Special to the Times.

London, May 28.—A remarkable insight into the future development of international politics along the lines of commercial rivalry has been given this week. It marks the beginning of the revolution which has so long been prophesied in the diplomatic world, and recognizes a new power for shaping international destinies, of which Mr. Morgan is the pioneer representative.

The Times was the first to call attention to this matter in significant articles dealing with the alleged efforts of Germany to use the steamship deal to stir up hostility between England and the United States. It was urged that the Kaiser would be quick to see in the first outbreak of resentment of British pride an opportunity to turn it to the advantage of the Germans both in England and America. The Spectator to-day puts the case in this trenchant language:

"Germany, by the semi-official means which she knows so well how to employ, has seen an excellent opportunity in the excitement here, to exaggerate the perils to which we are being exposed, and has done her best to egg us on to resist the invasion of Great Britain by America. Her newspapers in public and her rulers in private have first triumphed over our alleged discomfiture and then urged us to arm and withstand the American invader before it is too late.

"This object in doing this has apparently been hidden from the majority of the leaders of public opinion, including a large number of members of the House of Commons, yet the aim of Germany is clear enough. She is terribly alarmed at the notion that America is entering on anything approaching commercial co-operation with Great Britain, for she sees in that prospect the creation of a force which would infallibly destroy her most cherished ambition. Accordingly, she has striven her hardest to make the assertion of America's claim to share in the Atlantic transport business not a source of closer relations between the two branches of our race, as it should be, but of enmity and distrust.

"The German Intelligence Department has grasped what the British public has not—that co-operation in the Atlantic carrying trade, and so in the carrying of our food supplies—would have an important effect on any future war between England and the Powers of the Continent. They see, though we do not, what we stand to gain politically and they to lose.

"Accordingly Germany is most anxious, if she cannot actually stop the shipping combine, to make it a source of ill-feeling between England and America."

This and other manifestations of awakening common sense after the first indignation over the shipping combine, mark a decided reaction of English opinion on Mr. Morgan's coup. The real significance of these discussions, as already indicated, lies in the advent of a great new factor in world politics, which is destined ere long to become the controlling influence.

Another extremely interesting article printed in the Spectator discusses the Kaiser's efforts to ingratiate himself and his countrymen with the American people. The writer argues that Emperor William fails to understand the Americans. He is sincerely anxious to win their respect and regard. He believes probably that the future of the world belongs in equal parts to the United States and the German world-power, and he would like to arrive at an agreement which would, he thinks, be useful and beneficial to both. He has no desire to trick or fake in the United States or to get them to sacrifice any interests essential to their welfare. His attitude, in fact, is that of a business man who says

"There is plenty of room for both of our firms, and when I say I desire to make things easy for you I am not trying to bamboozle you, but mean genuine and honest co-operation."

This is the attitude of the Emperor. In all probability he has not for the moment got any definite business proposal to make to the American people, or rather if he has, he realizes that the time has not yet arrived. But till he makes that proposal he wants them to feel confidence in him and his aims and policy.

The writer proceeds to point out that the Kaiser must not imagine that Americans can be won by flattery. Moreover, nothing will win their confidence and affection unless he is prepared to do honor to certain ideals of which the Americans believe themselves to be special guardians, namely—civil and religious liberty, equality before the law, and the abolition of special and personal privileges. Nobody believes, however, that the Kaiser will give up his autocratic pretensions or cease to require the slavish obedience demanded by the divine right of royalism.

RESTORATION OF TIEN TSIN.

Special to The Times.

London, May 27.—The Pekin correspondent of The Times says that in the conditions drawn up for the restoration of Tien Tsin to the native Government the foreign commanders insist upon refusing to permit Chinese troops to approach within thirty kilometers of the city. This means, says the correspondent, that an area of more than one thousand square miles is to be deprived of the only means the Chinese possess of maintaining order, and will sooner or later again compel foreign intervention.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Stratton is a sure winner.

One day more and then to the polls!

• • • •

A vote for Stratton is a vote for Peterborough.

• • • •

It is a sad sight to observe our Tory friends have again taken to the Bole.

• • • •

So far the little local Tory organ has not called Mr. Stratton a horse thief. There must be something wrong 'round the corner

• • • •

Mr. orator Garvin is badly rattled the other night Mr. R. F. McWilliams got after him. He can't even play golf now.

• • • •

Come around to the market square tomorrow night and see The Times' election returns by lime light.

Mr. Stratton has faithfully represented this riding for 16 years, and it would be foolish to think of a change when he is in a position to do so much good.

• • • •

Mr. Stratton is worthy of the support of the electors of West Peterborough because he has always been foremost in promoting their welfare.

• • • •

There is only one kind of Victory that would be fitting for the present occasion in West Peterborough: Give Mr. Stratton an increased majority.

• • • •

We hear a good deal said about voting for Mr. Stratton's opponent. We would like to hear of a single instance in which Mr. Stratton failed to do his duty by his constituents. They have ever been his first thought, and no man could do more than he has done. True as steel to his people they should see that he is rewarded by heaping up his majority.

• • • •

Formal announcement of peace was not among the causes of rejoicing on Victoria Day, but the belief is so widespread that the end of the war is at hand that, unless something unforeseen happens, May 24th, 1902, will be associated in many minds with the happy event. It is quite probable that the Dutch rebels will continue to keep in the woods after the Boers have laid down their arms.

• • • •

Steyn and the Free State leaders are reluctant to accept a peace which extinguishes the last hope of independence for their little commonwealth.

No wonder.

The Free State has allowed Steyn to write it down in history as a most illustrious donkey. Britain had given the Free State absolutely no cause of offence. The assurance of help from the Free State encouraged Kruger to believe that he could safely defy Britain. The war was of the Free State's own making.

INDIAN ULTIMATUM

Chief Gabriel says there Will be War if Disputes are not Settled

Montreal, May 28 — "Indians of Oka will have war if Governor-General of Canada will not listen to King's orders and stop these officers and French people from troubling us." Thus writes Joseph Kennatosse Gabriel, one of the councillors and chiefs on the Indian reservation. The Indians have had some trouble for a number of months past with parties on whose lands they cut wood, as they claimed by right, and warrants were issued as a result for Gabriel and another named Beauvais. They both escaped, and the next heard of Kennatosse was from London, where he tried to interview the King at Buckingham Palace in regard to title to lands in dispute. Some bright flunkey sent him to the American embassy. Gilbert Parker finally took the chief in hand and advised him to return to Canada and see the Canadian Government. Gabriel's ultimatum continues: "In the old agreement and treaties the English said, I have taken you and your wives and children, so that no one shall molest or hurt you, so that while the sun and moon gives light, the mountains remain and the rivers run, all those who remember the old agreement are asked to come and help. The chief has been to England to King Edward VII and has the King's order to take to the Government, but they seem to refuse to listen."

MAJOR MILLER'S DEATH

This spasm is not original; it is copied and altered to suit the occasion by a correspondent of this great family journal:

Not a cry was heard, not a sorrowful word
As his corpse from the committee room they hurried;
For the fight was now over, and everyone said,
That the Major was deeply buried.

Gladly he entered the fight, hoping to win,
For the wily Tories deceived him;
They led him to think he should surely get in
Now the political grave received him.

He had told about school-books municipal law,
About boodling he did some squealing,
But he found to his cost that the cards did not draw,
That the Province wished none of his healing.

A few stood around, said a lovely Amen;
And the Grits were all broadly smiling,
And they looked up their sleeves, did these bad Tory men—
For now they were now through beguiling.

Items of News

FOUR YOUNGSTERS IN GREAT PERIL.

There is much alarm at Port Credit regarding the safety of four lads of that village named George Johnston, aged 17; Harry Stewart, aged 14; his brother, Bert, aged 12 years, and Eddie McBride, aged 14 years. They obtained a boat yesterday evening and went away in it. Which direction they took is not known, but, as there was a strong off-shore wind blowing and as the night was very cold it is feared the boys may have been blown out on the lake and may all have perished.

In great anxiety, James McBride, father of one of the missing lads, drove in from Port Credit this morning and reported the matter to the Parkdale police, after sending a despatch to Hamilton as well, and making enquiries along the road.

When it is remembered that the oldest is only 17, while one is only 12, it is not probable that any of them appreciated the danger of an off-shore wind. The parents are distracted over the affair.

A NEW SYSTEM TO BE ADOPTED.

Montreal, Que., May 27.—As a consequence of an arrest made here on the charge of smuggling by Chief of Detectives Carter, at the instance of Chief Inspector Jones of the Customs Department, it is probable that an entire change will be made in the system of examining baggage coming into Canada from the United States.

Lewis Henry was arrested, charged with smuggling jewellery into Canada to the value of $2,000. Henry is in the wine-making business and imported this jewellery consisting of watches, diamonds, rings, and other articles to New York, paying there, and so he shipped it as ordinary baggage to this city. By some means he got the trunks through without examination, and it was only by an accident that the customs officials got wind of the affair. It is understood the customs department will at once adopt the United States system all along the border, station customs officers in the chief United States centres and hold all baggage at the border which has not been examined and passed.

THE NAVY ALSO WILL CELEBRATE.

Special to The Times.

London, May 27.—The Admiralty is making preparations under the initiative of the Prince of Wales, to enable the British fleet all over the world to join the coronation ceremonies. Warships will be sent to the principal ports of each station.

London, May 27 — The London Statist of a recent date contains the official statement of the British Treasury returns of expenses for the wars in South Africa and China. Up to March of this year the former war has cost $796,870,000, while the estimated expenses for the current year will bring these figures to $1,114,870,000. The cost of the China campaign will add $30,000,000 more to this total. To pay the war bills of the year and also meet a deficit in the ordinary expenditures the ordinary revenue would have had to be increased by $80,000,000. The treasury will receive for the four years of the war up to March 1903 $390,000,000 from taxes, leaving $775,000,000 to be obtained by the convenient method of adding it to the national debt, which will be a charge for years. It is little wonder that the English people are anxious for a successful issue of the present negotiations with the Boers.

New York, May 28.—The rioting around the Kosher meat markets on the east side continued yesterday and last night. The regular police forces were reinforced by 500 reserve men. A policeman participating in an assault on a butchershop belonging to a man named Schlosky was attacked by women pickets and had to summon assistance before he could take Mrs. Pflax to the station house.

The Jewish butchers closed their shops at the beginning of the Sabbath last night. Several restaurants which had been serving meat with meals during the day were attacked by mobs last night and a few stones were thrown. A rumor spread that an attack was to be made on the court prison and a mob of a thousand soon gathered. They were easily dispersed by the police. Few arrests were made.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD
THE HEINTZMAN & CO. PIANO
Holds First Place in the Piano World.

Here's a piano that's the cynosure of all eyes. Musical critics know it as an instrument that holds a place by itself among Canadian made pianos—and that ranks with foreign pianos of widest reputation. It is the ideal piano.

At all great functions and musical events it is the choice of the greatest artists. It is the piano that was the choice of Royalty—being used exclusively on the royal train by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York in their journey through Canada.

Michael J. Fleming, a prominent lawyer of Pottsville and formerly principal of the Donaldson High School, related the following anecdote:

"One day at school I gave a very bright boy a sum in algebra, and, although the problem was comparatively easy, he couldn't do it. I remarked:

"'You should be ashamed of yourself. At your age George Washington was a surveyor.'

"The boy looked me straight in the eyes and replied;

"'Yes, sir, and at your age he was President of the United States."

They were young and romantic, and although the minute hand was pointing to 12 o'clock, they stood upon the porch gazing at the stars.

"That's Jupiter, dear, isn't it?" she murmured.

"Yes, pet; and that is Sirius," he replied, pointing to another star.

"Are you serious?" she cooed.

He kissed her. Then, pointing upward, he said:—

"That's Mars, dove."

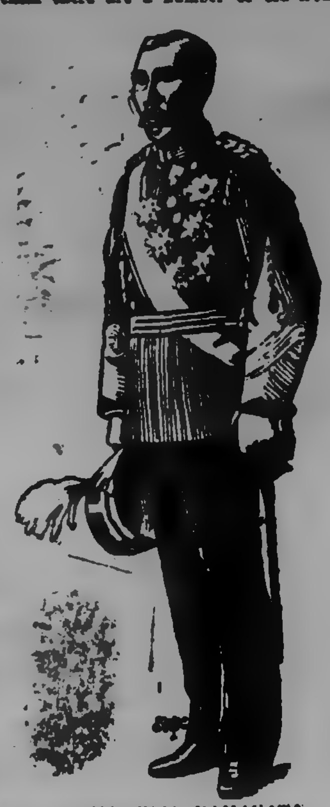
"And that's pa'a," she whispered, as a footstep sounded inside.

And if the young man hadn't "scooted" he would have seen more stars than he ever dreamed of.—London Spare Moments.

Japan's Army and Navy.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance and the guarded comments upon it from the official spokesmen of the Franco-Russian alliance have set people scanning the military forces of our new ally. One of the best authorities upon Japan's naval strength is Mr. H. W. Wilson, author of the Standard work "Ironclads in Action." In the March number of The Navy League Journal he says:—

"The Japanese fleet consists of the following vessels which may be said to have military value, and in addition to them there are a number of old ironclads, sloops and gunboats, which are of little fighting value:—



FIELD-MARSHAL YAMAGATA.

"Six first-class battleships, all built in England, and similar in design to the Majestics and the Royal Sovereigns, each armed with four 12-inch and ten to fourteen 6-inch guns, steaming eighteen knots, and carrying a good supply of coal.

"Six so-called armored cruisers, all new, which are virtually small battleships. They steam 20 to 23 knots, and carry four 8-inch and twelve to fourteen 6-inch guns apiece. Four of the six were built in England.

"Four protected cruisers of twenty-two to twenty-four knots, all heavily armed and exceptionally powerful ships.

"Thirteen older or smaller protected cruisers, six of which fought at the Yalu.

"Sixteen destroyers.

"About fifty effective torpedo boats.

"It will be seen that these ships in the hands of fine seamen, such as the Japanese unquestionably are, make a very formidable squadron, quite capable at the present time of holding its own against the combined fleets of all the continental powers in the far east."

Mr. Wilson goes on to point out that the personnel of the Japanese navy is rather over 9,000, that the navy is well supplied with bases, dockyards and arsenals and that Japan controls a number of all-important strategic points. "Her naval bases," he remarks, "supplement in a singular degree those of England, and link up in one continuous chain Hong Kong with the Gulf of Pe Chili." The Japanese army on a war footing will be able to place about 730,000 men in the field, when the reorganization now in progress is complete. The field army is organized in divisions and is about 250,000 men strong, with 1,098 guns. The officers and men are excellent, and in the opinion of many the Japanese were the best of all the troops who took part in the advance to Pekin.

While upon this subject, another quotation from The Navy League Journal may be adduced. Commenting upon the recent decision to remove the old Agamemnon from the effective list of the Royal Navy, the journal narrates a singular instance of cool judgment, of self-restraint combined with a grasp of the actual situation. "In the Russian scare of 1883," says the journal, "she was sent to the far east to 'shadow' the Vladimir Monomach. On reaching Yokosuka, ignorant whether war had been declared while he was at sea, her then captain, Long, saw that the Vladimir was so anchored that it was necessary for the Agamemnon to pass close to her, and that the Russian had her heavy guns trained on the water-line of the British ship, while her light pieces were directed at the Agamemnon's deck and bridge. Long, wisely, made no counter-demonstration, feeling that if she fired on him he could at once send her to the bottom with his ram. So the Agamemnon passed without incident after a minute or two of extreme tension, in which peace and war hung upon a thread."

A Young Men's Home.

A curious and very practical line of philanthropic work is about to be tried in London, for the benefit of young men who are living in London on small means. The scheme for providing a central residential club, which has been under the consideration of a special committee of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall for some time, is now practically settled. It is proposed to provide a superior kind of Rowton House, with about 400 separate bedrooms, and let them at the rate of three shillings, or 75 cents, a week. This will give the resident the free run of the institution, including library, recreation room, baths and gymnasium, together with the use of storage accommodation for bicycles. Meals will be supplied in a comfortable and commodious dining-room at a mere fraction above cost price, and even the laundry will be economically run. It is likely that this hotel for studious youth may cost £25,000, and will soon pay for itself.

RIGHT OR WRONG.

SERMON BY

GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

It is time to seek the Lord, till He come and rain righteousness upon you.—Hosea, x., 12.

What is true will hold its own against any odds. The bright yellow flame may be hidden in the dense smoke for a while, but if you have patience the smoke will blow away and the bright yellow flame will make the night like day. Astronomers tell us of stars which have grown old and crumbled, gone to pieces and filled the infinite spaces with their disintegrated particles, but no man has ever yet said that a truth has died. There is no death, but only life to truth. It is born, or it is discovered, but once seen it is never extinguished. God's own life is in it, for it is a part of Him, and neither can earthquakes destroy nor avalanches bury it.

This also is true of what is right. It may be smothered by the private or the national conscience, but it has its triumphal procession at last and drags wrong a prisoner at its chariot wheels. It is stronger than any one man, stronger than all the world in combination against it. You may sooner hope to blast Gibraltar and hurl it into the sea than to break what is right from its resting place in the omnipotence of God.

It always conquers, and he alone who is on the side of right is the victor in the end. Stretch the line of life until it fades into the mystery beyond the hazy horizon of this present life, and you may be sure that evil is evanescent and right is eternal. When it shall be our privilege to take some high standpoint in the large future and look back on these fleeting, exciting days of greed and selfish rivalry, we shall see with clear, perhaps with tearful and regretful eyes, that every mean word and thought and deed, however great the promise of advantage, has entailed a direct and palpable loss, and that when we did right, though at a sacrifice, then, and then only, were we paid in the coin of happiness and self-respect. It never pays to do a wilful or a conscious wrong. Were that possible the universe would contradict itself, and God Himself would be a dream or a myth.

There is but one principle that holds fast in whatever waters you cast your anchor, namely, that he can never be driven to shipwreck of soul who knows what he ought to do and dares to do it, though it costs him so much that his heart breaks. A man's character is all he has, it is his one great possession, and if he loses that he loses all, absolutely all. With self-respect the consciousness that your integrity is unsullied, you can face all worlds and look with undimmed vision on the throne of the eternal. Neither wealth nor poverty is known in heaven or regarded, but what you are in the fibre of your being, what you are in the moral timber of which you have made yourself, what you have done that is worth recording in a world filled with pitying angels, these alone have weight and bring credit.

We may not all be rich, 'tis true, and perhaps 'tis pity that 'tis true. You may have discomfort and struggle, possibly more storm than sunshine, a weary road to travel through these narrow years, but be sure of this, as sure as you are of the wisdom of God, that an honest man with a clean soul is worth more than all the wealth that excites our envy or stimulates our jealousy. To stand square with the law of justice and sympathy and fidelity, to be a hero because you are unsoiled by deeds which sting with the painful sting of a wasp, is to lay up a treasure of which death cannot rob you, and which will lift you out of the grave laden with the blessing of God.

Right is the normal heart beat which indicates health and vigor, while wrong is that heart failure which foretells death. You can live without many things, and still be comfortable, but if you try to live without the approval of your conscience despair will creep over you as the shadows of evening creep over the earth at sundown. Religion teaches us to keep our faces toward heaven, as the mariner watches the pole star, and to steer by what we see. To be true, just, kindly, is to bring heaven so near that when you die you will have but a step to go, and that step will take you within reach of a welcome that will make you glad that you have sacrificed all else but kept your faith in the true and the right intact.

When down to luncheon Elsie sits
With Harold, Guy or Percy,
She orders all the choicest bits
Without one sign of mercy.

She fancies grouse, or, haply, quail,
When each is out of season,
Forgetting quite that these entail
Expense beyond all reason.

But when she's been to do the shops,
Her appetite is duller,
For, lunching then alone, she stops
At coffee and a cruller.
—Arthur Crawford, in The Smart Set.

The Wife of Potiphar.

The country of the Nile was beautiful with verdure. The sky was a dream of light and changing glory; the long caravans of the merchants diverged towards the city of the Pharaohs, bearing purple cloth from Tyre, and rare gems and metal work from Damascus, and carved woods and perfumes from the Isles of the Sea.

A train of dusky men and dusty camels loomed up in silhouette over a ridge, and for a few moments formed a huge picture against a fathomless horizon. On one of the camels was a quaint canopied erection with curtains of silk, and within the curtains sat uneasily a girl of some sixteen years. She had all the beauty of the young Semite, large soft dark eyes, an oval face, somewhat over-full lips of deep red, and nostrils sensitive and distended.

From time to time she plucked aside the curtains with a long slim hand and looked anxiously out. "God of Abraham, thy handmaid crieth unto thee!" she said softly in a voice broken with distress and strenuously pitched. "If help come not soon from above, may death release me!"

Two of the Egyptian traders looked up as some murmur of her vibrant tones reached them where they walked.

"The Hebrew maid speaks," said the younger. The elder waved his hand. "I do not listen," he said, briefly.

"But she may be ill," suggested the younger, glancing at the parting of the curtains and the four small brown fingers. "Bring up the other captive who speaks her tongue and let him enquire," said the elder merchant.

The younger man stood still, and one by one the others passed him, camels laden and men walking. Near the end of the line marched a beautiful boy just emerging into manhood. The young trader called to him kindly, and the youth came to his side.

"I fear for the health of the maiden," he said, briefly. "Come thou and question her."

The eyes of the youth flashed a proud glance at the trader, and then he drew away from him, and a certain faraway look, as of one who sees something enthralling in the distance, crept into his lately flashing eyes.

"The Jewish maiden travels to high honor. Wherefore should she sicken before it meets her? It is her mind that travails in fear of the birth of some new horror," he said, briefly. "The lamb cries for its dam, the young nestling for its mother and its nest. What need for questions? When the maid sits among the mighty ones in a strange land she will learn to forget her sorrow."

"You say wisely, boy," said the trader. "We hope to sell her for much gold to a noble captain of Pharaoh's guard. He has lost his wife, and there is no war in progress. In times of peace warriors are prone to look upon such fair women."

The two had hastened and were now abreast of the silk-curtained canopy, which swayed to the rolling gait of the camel.

"Speak to the maid," commanded the trader.

"Daughter of my people, is all well with thee?" called the youth, his young cheek reddening as he obeyed. The curtains parted.

"Art thou, too, a Hebrew?" cried the girl, with amazement and delight in every tone.

"I am, and, like thee, a captive, foully sold into bondage by my brethren," said the youth, with deep, hoarse anger.

"Alas! then can you tell what is to be our fate?" asked the girl with great tears in her eyes.

"Slavery for me, for thee high honor, riches, luxury, and the captain of Pharaoh's Guard to be thy husband," said the youth, slowly and dreamily.

The Hebrew maiden looked at him in staring dismay.

"What have you said to her?" asked the trader, jogging the arm of the youth. Again the proud eyes flashed, and again grew quickly calm and gentle.

"I have told her that she is to be the wife of the captain of Pharaoh's Guard, and she liketh not my saying," he said, meekly.

The trader laughed. "She liketh not!" he said scornfully, quoting the youth. "When she seeth Potiphar she will fall at his feet. That is our finest and wisest warrior. Tell her what I say." The youth obeyed.

"But I am a Hebrew, and may not mate with a heathen and idolatrous man!" gasped the girl wildly.

The youth sighed. "The hand of our God be upon thee," he said, and fell back to his place in the rear.

* * * * * *

The captain of the Guard sat in his chamber and sorted upon a beautiful carved stand a heap of exquisite gems. There were ear-rings, nose-rings, armlets and anklets, long pear-shaped pearls, strings of round pearls, rings set with great royal rubies, and emeralds deeply and gloriously green. He suddenly sat up and smote his palms together, and a Nubian parted a curtain and came in.

"Take these gifts to the Hebrew maiden, and bid her women prepare her for my coming," said the warrior, pushing aside a heap of jingling, flashing ornaments. The Nubian gathered an end of his scarlet sash and carefully placed the selected jewels within the improvised bag. Then, speechless, he backed out between the curtains. The warrior leaned back with a smile.

"Rachel will wear those gauds well," he said, softly stroking his short beard and crossing his legs. "I have given her only the new ornaments and the jewels of my mother. The gems my wife wore would bring her misfortune. I am full of the fancies of women to talk thus! This comes of loitering at home, when one should be abroad conquering provinces and fighting one's way about."

A great yawn heaved the warrior's deep chest. He swept the remaining jewels into a coffer, of which he drew a small golden key from his bosom. Then he clapped his hands twice, and again the curtains parted and forth between them stepped the Hebrew youth. He was dressed in rich and stately garb, and his bearing was distinctly distinguished. He bowed ceremoniously and stood before the warrior. Potiphar laughed easily and good-naturedly.

"Hast no word, Joseph?" he enquired.

"All words are good, noble captain. Thy house is well ordered, thy goods are well cared. The land hath peace."

"That last word is not good for fighting men, Hebrew. I would a war came with the setting sun," said Potiphar, yawning again.

"'Tis thy wedding eve, noble captain," said the Hebrew quickly.

"True, and I must make ready," assented Potiphar. "Send a slave for that casket and put it in thine own store-place. It contains precious jewels."

The Hebrew bowed and turned away. Just as he lifted the curtain to leave the chamber a hurried step was heard. A messenger met him on the threshold and handed him a rolled papyrus. "Pharaoh desires the captain of the Guard," whispered the messenger, as he deferentially presented the roll, and the overseer turned back to his master and repeated the message.

"My chariot!" cried the captain, leaping from his seat. "Hebrew, I have my wish. It is war, and in the south where there be tough fighters. Pharaoh's the king, desires me take men this day and meet them half-way. This stirs my sleeping blood! This suits me better than brides and bridals! But, stay! the Hebrew maiden. Go to her; tell her privately of this, for the king must be the first to tell the people. I do not think many tears will fall because the nuptial rites be delayed. Tell the maiden, who is also thy country-woman, that for this postponement I will, when I return, give her thy freedom. And guard her, Hebrew, till that day, be it far or near!"

The overseer bowed and went upon his errand. On his proud face was a look of awe and triumph.

"Lo! the God of Abraham hath encompassed the maiden!" he said slowly. And the slaves and soldiers eyed him as he strode away, and whispered: "The Hebrew has seen a vision! The light of the unknown is upon his face."

* * * * * *

The war dragged slowly, news came fitfully, and week by week the bride of Potiphar and the overseer of his house were drawn by the triple cord of nationality, religion and youthful ardor nearer and nearer. The Hebrew maiden lived secluded from the city and from the court. She passed many hours in converse day by day with the overseer, and together they kept alive the religion of their fathers in their hearts. The maiden lifted her beautiful head in hope as she listened to the voice of Joseph, encouraging and buoying her frightened soul. The inevitable happened at last, and an unguarded word, a look too much confessed the love that was as natural as it was pure, and the two faced the problem in mingled terror and rapture. Escape from Egypt was impossible; a happy consummation of their love was equally out of the question. The city was even then being decked for the triumphant return of the captain of the Guard.

The day of his entry dawned, and the heart of the overseer was of lead, while the anguished bride-elect of the victorious warrior had now added to the horror of union with an idolatrous man the torture of love for another.

While the house of the captain of the Guard was being wreathed with flowers, and the singing maidens stood waiting at the gates with lotus crowns and stringed instruments garlanded with wreaths of green, the overseer, in his sumptuous festival garments, sought the Hebrew girl. She sat amid her maidens in silent despair. The overseer bowed low before her.

"Dismiss the maidens," he said, in their own speech, and, made cunning by her extremity, she rose hurriedly. "Is it indeed true that the lord of the house is near?" she said in Egyptian, misleading them. "Then to the first of my maidens who sees the shining of his armor will I give this ring of rubies. Run, now, to the upper windows and watch."

The Egyptian girls dropped their work and hurried up the short stair to the flat roof, round which was a high wall, pierced by small openings. The overseer stood moodily looking upon the ground. The Hebrew girl drew near timidly and clasping her hands upon her fluttering bosom, where jewels flashed with her panting breath, looked up into his young and clouded face.

"Is there no escape for me?" she asked in trembling tones. "Must it be either the knife or the marriage-bed of the idolator?" The overseer started violently.

"I have said it, and I am not afraid," said the girl, her great eyes darkening and her nostrils rounding tensely.

The overseer paused a moment. "There is no escape," he said slowly. The girl gave a small, stifled groan. "It will not be so very bad," she said, quivering. "Just a little pain, and safety, and thou, some day, wilt tell my people of me? That I was true." And then, before the overseer could anticipate her movement or guard her from herself, she threw herself into his arms, clinging about him and sobbing "Farewell!"

There was a burst of song from the gates, a cry from the maidens, the overseer wrenched the thin, clinging fingers from his neck and tried to tear them from his rich garment. They had a vice-like, frantic grip.

There was a rush of the maidens, a tramp of a heavy foot beyond the curtain; in vain the overseer whispered, "The captain of the Guard is here."

With one frenzied wrench he slipped from the gorgeous robe and dashed through the inner entrance, just as the maidens scurried laughing down the stone steps to claim their reward, and the parted curtains gave admission to the captain of the Guard.

The girl stood in the center of the chamber, her face white and drawn, in her hands the brilliant robe of the overseer, in her eyes a horror unspeakable. The captain of the Guard advanced with a quick glance about him.

"He was here?" he said. "This is his robe?"

The girl suddenly dropped it with a faint cry. She began to see horror and danger ahead.

"You are not hurt?" said the captain of the Guard, gently, touching her shoulder. She shook her head. Then he turned to the maidens.

"Go to the dance!" he said, sternly, "and send me here four of my soldiers who wait without."

The moment the curtain fell the Hebrew girl awoke from her trance of terror. In few and stumbling Egyptian phrases she tried to tell the truth, asking for swift death, and handing her pitiful little dagger to the captain of the Guard. He pushed it aside.

"Peace, girl!" he cried shortly. "'Tis a pleasant and joyous home-coming!" Then, as the soldiers noisely entered, he said grimly: "Take this robe to him who was overseer. 'Tis well he fled before I entered to slay him; 'tis better that the maiden is brave and strong; but 'tis best of all that the Hebrew be safely put away, so that he affright not lesser woman as he hath stricken with terror the bride of your captain. Therefore, lay him safe in the prison, and your lives be forfeit if aught befall him without my word! Do all quickly and quietly, so that the rejoicings be not interrupted."

The soldiers gathered up the rich robe and retired, and the captain of the Guard turned to the Hebrew maiden. "Come, let us go to the feast," he said simply. But she made no response.

She looked blankly at him one instant with a curious furrow across her brow and an audible sucking in of her breath. Then she swayed and fell. When he lifted her up very gently but without concern, only the little golden hilt of the dagger showed outside the pinched-in drapery just below her left breast. The blade was piercing the point of her startled heart!

* * * * * *

The wailing and chanting of passing mourners pierced the dungeon window-place, where the overseer sat with his head in his hands. "What is the wailing?" he asked his jailer. "They mourn the dead, that was to have been the [illegible] thou hast angered," said the jailer.

"When did death deliver the maiden?" cried the prisoner.

"At the very hour of thy coming here," replied the jailer. Then he stared with amaze, for the prisoner leapt to his feet, his despair vanishing like a cloud.

"Praise and glory and honor and power to Jehovah, the God of my fathers!" he said, reverently, in Hebrew, and with fixed eyes he stood as if he saw a bright vision. The jailer shook his head and went softly to his place. "The Hebrew hath eyes that see the unseen," he muttered. "His God is near him. I who worship Isis, Osiris and the gods of the Egyptians cannot comprehend him."

The years were many and the captain of the Guard and the jailer had gone to their long home before the Hebrew captive was free, but never once did a darkness becloud his face again such as was upon it during the first hours of his captivity, before he knew that the wife of Potiphar had sealed her faith with her heart's blood.

Humor of the Hour.

"You are not sick, Job," said one of the friends. "You only think you are."

"Only think I am, eh?"

"Yes. It is merely a delusion."

"Well, then, all I've got to say is, I'd rather be sick than have this delusion."

And then poor old Job went exploring for a new boil that had just made its debut on the back of his neck.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A gentleman wishing some bushes removed from his garden told his gardener to pull them up by the roots. Some time after he went into the garden and found the gardener digging trenches round the bushes.

"Why, George," he said, "you need not dig round those small bushes in that way. I am sure you are strong enough to pull them up by the roots."

"Oh, yes, sir," replied the gardener, "I am strong enough, but I must dig a little before I can catch hold of the roots. If you had told me to pull them up by the branches I could have removed them."—London Answers.

A Letter from the Front

Montreal, May 21.—The following letter was received from Clerksdorp, dated April 8, by Mrs. Massiah, Montreal, from her son, Trooper H. C. Massiah, of the S.A.C.:

"About two weeks ago we had a big drive, not a sleigh drive but a Boer drive. We left Val Banks Sunday at 7 p.m., rode all night, and next day ran into the Boers about 4 p.m., Monday, capturing their convoy, three 15-pounders and two pom-poms killed 70 and captured 36; but, as our chief object was to drive the Boers into the columns on the Clerksdorp side, we were satisfied, as the other columns got 1,000 of them.

"We camped in Haardebustefontein valley Monday night, April 3, after being in the saddle twenty-four hours. We stayed there all day Tuesday resting our horses and only sending out small patrols. We left Wednesday morning at 4 o'clock, arriving at Vaal Banks about 8 p.m. Our troops captured nine Boers, 14 mules and 11 horses also three Cape carts. We left Thursday and got here Saturday at 10.30 a.m. This is to be our chief camp for a time. We send patrols out every day. We had another flying column out on Tuesday and Wednesday after a Boer laager near Mafeking, but when we got there they had skipped. But we ran into a Boer convoy, capturing it all, including 1,000 head of cattle 3,000 sheep and 30 prisoners. Col. Keke which is in command left us. The Cameron Highlanders joined us two days ago."

MIX-UP WITH THE BOERS.

In another letter dated April 17, Private Massiah, says:

"I have not written since we left Bloemfontein. We had a big scrap about four miles from where the C. M. R's got cut up. Von Dollop's column with a few men and one gun were ahead of us when Kemp and Bothister, thinking they had an easy thing, rushed the advance, consisting of M. I.'s and Y. L.'s. The M. I.'s got mixed up with the Boers while the Y. L.'s skipped for the convoy. The Scottish Horse were driven on the guns. We were supports to the advance, and when the order came we rode up, dismounted and opened fire at 800 yards. The Boers were riding knee to knee, their lines hanging loose, their rifles resting in the hollow of the left arm, firing like blazes. They came on until they were within 75 yards, when our fire became too hot for them, and they turned and fled. The guns, which had opened up by this time, shelling them until they were out of sight. They left 30 dead on the field, including Commandant Botgister, 60 wounded and 30 prisoners. Our loss was 14 killed and 60 wounded. None were hit in the Canadian troops. We chased the Boers for 18 miles, and got their three guns, which they captured from Lord Methuen, also 15 prisoners and one pom-pom. The signal for their attack seemed to be two shots from their 15-pounders. It appears that they only saw one column, while ours, under Col. Grenfell, was behind out of sight. Both columns were under command of Col. Kekewich.

"We left Doornfontein Tuesday morning at half-past four and got in here at 2.30 p.m., a distance of 42 miles. We are going tomorrow morning to Black's Spruit, 14 miles away. The C. M. R.'s are back here again.

"I saw Harry Niven again yesterday. He had tea with George Addy and I. He is in good health and spirits.

"There is a rumour that the Canadian S. A. C.'s are going home in October. There is a peace conference going on at present. I think a few weeks will see the finish."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

up, I could creep away somewhere and die. I was not strong enough to resist the temptation, Hetty; love urged me on. To lose Aleck was death in life."

"You have heard how Harold St John was pardoned," Daisy went on with bitter sobs; "he hunted me down and found me out, and now, Hetty, within the hour he is coming here to claim and expose me."

"Oh, Hetty, by the love you bore me when we were happy, innocent little children together, I pray you to save me, think of me, act for me tell me what I must do to still keep Aleck's love. I cannot give him up now, Hetty, better death than that."

Daisy had slipped from her arms to the long grass again, and lay sobbing there as though her tortured heart would break.

"An hour," murmured Hetty, "it is not long to think, to decide the fate of a lifetime, but I will think for you dear, I will help you, you know I would give my very life for you, Daisy!"

"I cannot give up my love and live," murmured Daisy, in pitiful gasps; "remember that, Hetty."

"I shall remember," sobbed Hetty, pacing up and down the walk with a face as white as death.

What could she do? How could she aid Daisy? A thousand ideas presented themselves to her mind, but were cast aside as impracticable.

She looked up to the blue, smiling heavens, calling upon the pitying angels to help her devise some plan to aid, poor, beautiful, hapless Daisy.

It was a terrible sin —but even as God was merciful he would show her some leniency —she was so young then; hardly more than a child now —only eighteen —surely heaven would have pity.

"Mother!" cried poor Hetty, raising her arms up to the white clouds "Oh, my sainted mother! If you are looking down upon Daisy's woe, tell me —put it into my heart how I shall save her, for I know not how."

From over the waving bloom she heard the sound of voices. The hour was up; she could hear Aleck's voice and the squire's. Olive was with them, and looking through the green branches of the budding lilacs, she saw Harold St. John join them. The sardonic smile on his face was terrible to see.

They walked in silence to the fountain, where they had left Hetty, and as they appeared in view, Daisy sprang to Hetty's side, clinging desperately to her neck, crying in wild, piteous gasps:

"I will!" whispered the noble girl, standing like a champion over her beautiful, cowering, terror-stricken sister.

"Now, my children," said the old squire, huskily, "you are all together. You all know this man's claim —that one of you is his wedded wife."

"Speak!" thundered the squire, facing his three daughter. "If either — which is the one? This man prefers, he says, that his wife should step forward and acknowledge it; if not, he will end the controversy by doing so."

Unclasping slowly the clinging arms, Hetty Gordon stepped forward, pale as death answering in a clear, steady voice that did not falter or tremble:

"Father, I am the one!"

CHAPTER XLII.

Which is his Wife?

A silence as terrible as death fell over the group assembled there as those startling words fell from Hetty Gordon's lips.

"And I declare that you are not!" Harold St. John cried. "I see through it all; it's a game put up between you to throw people off the right track, but that shall not be. Hear me all, I solemnly swear that this girl is not my wife, but her sister Daisy is!"

The announcement fell like a thunderbolt upon the amazed, speechless group; in an instant Alexander Hamilton had sprung forward white as death, but a bitter cry from Daisy arrested the blow that would have fallen from his upraised arm, causing him to turn quickly about.

"Do not strike him, Aleck," she cried, piteously; "the man is mad, quite mad!"

"Not so mad as you would have me appear," cried St. John, angrily; "it is you who are mad in braving this thing out so audaciously.

"It would serve you all right if I should force that girl who is declaring herself to be my wife to come and live with me," he added, with a harsh laugh horrible to hear.

Hetty drew back in the greatest horror. "No, no, no," she cried. "I would face death sooner than that."

"I say that is the position I could take if I chose," retorted St. John, coolly, "but I do not so choose; I want my lawfully wedded wife, and I will have her if I have to go through all the courts to get her, that I swear to you."

It was quite as much as both Hetty and Daisy, with their combined strength, could do to hold Aleck back, his rage was so intense.

"Let go your hold!" he cried, "and go with the squire to the house, all of you; I will settle with this dastardly wretch as he deserves to be settled with," but they clung to him all the more.

"A few words will settle this matter, Alexander Hamilton," said St. John. "We will send for the minister who wedded us that night and abide by his decision. Come now, is that not fair?"

"You might bribe the man to swear falsely for you," cried Hetty, but this solution of the difficulty rather appeased Aleck.

"And I," he said, "will pay him thrice the sum offered by you, St. John, to tell the truth, and nothing but the truth."

"I am willing, certainly," declared St. John.

"It will put this affair at an end," declared Aleck, whispering hoarsely in Daisy's ear. "That man is such a fiend incarnate, he would otherwise foist this matter before the courts, simply for the sake of extorting money from us, as well as making this disgraceful marriage of your poor sister Hetty known. Of course, dear, I know it is the cruelest kind of an outrage to draw you into the affair; still, for Hetty's sake, be wise."

No word, no cry broke from Daisy's lips; she threw up her white hands, and fell at his feet in a dead faint.

Anecdotal.

In one of the Philadelphia colleges a professor of chemistry asked a student the other day: "Now, suppose you were called to a patient who had swallowed a heavy dose of oxalic acid, what would you administer?" "I would administer the sacrament," replied the student, who, by the way, is said to be studying for the ministry, and takes chemistry because it is obligatory.

It is reported that Innocent IV. and Thomas Aquinas were standing together as the bags of treasure were being carried in through the gates of the Lateran. "You see," observed the Pope, with a smile, "the day is past when the Church could say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "Yes, holy father," was the saint's reply, "and the day is past also when the Church could say to the lame man, 'Rise and walk.'"

W. J. Bryan told a good story at his own expense in New York recently: "I spoke during the campaign in a little Illinois town. In front of me sat a man rigidly attentive. He drank in every word I said; I think he had drunk in something else besides. When I finished he came up and wrung my hand. 'Mr. Bryan,' he said, 'you are wonderful, wonderful. You are the first man I ever saw whose back teeth I could see all the time he was speaking.'"

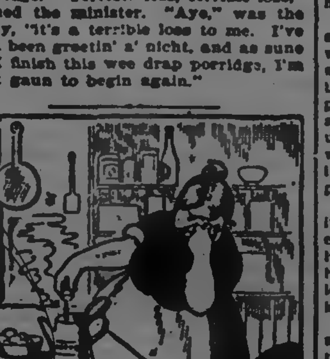
President Roosevelt is fond of telling any story at his own expense. That which he enjoys most is the following: Former Governor Wise had told the President that it was the general opinion, so far as he had heard, that he would go down to posterity as a Washington. The President replied that he was delighted to hear that. "But," added Wise, in a serious manner, "whether it will be as a George or a Booker T. I don't know." The President is said to have laughed so heartily over this that Wise became alarmed.

Dr. Rixey, who for some years was the private physician in the McKinley household, says that when the late President's mother sat down for the first time to a White House dinner what seemed to impress her most was the prodigal supply of cream. She commented on its abundance, and then added: "Well, William, at last I know what they mean when they speak of the Cream of Society." The President laughed. "I admit," said he, "that there seems to be an extravagant array of cream on the table, but you know, mother, we can afford to keep a cow, now."

An amusing story is being told of Sir Henry Howorth, who, besides being the author of many scientific works, has written an elaborate historical book entitled "History of the Mongols." It seems that the other day Sir Henry found himself at a dinner party next to a lady who determinedly talked dogs to him from the soup to the dessert. Rather bored, Sir Henry at last remarked that though his friends somewhat unkindly declared that he could chatter on any subject, he was obliged to own that he was utterly at sea on the topic of dogs. The lady looked astounded. "Why, are you not Sir Henry Howorth? I understood from our host that you were the author of a learned book on Mongrels, and I was so delighted, as I am so interested in all kinds of dogs."

A story is told of a certain English bishop well known for his verbosity who rose to address the House of Lords on a very important occasion. "I will divide my speech under twelve heads," he said, to the discomfort of his audience. The Marquis of Salisbury begged to be allowed to interpose with a little anecdote. "A friend of mine was returning home late one night," he said, "when opposite St. Paul's he saw an intoxicated man trying to ascertain the time on the big clock there. Just then it began to strike and slowly tolled out twelve. The man listened, looked hard at the clock and said, 'Confound you, why couldn't you have said that all at once?'" The bishop heartily joined in the laughter which followed, and took the hint contained in the story.

Dr. John Kerr, the well-known Scottish school inspector, was once faced in a Banffshire manse by this question put to him by the lady of the house on behalf of her inquisitive son. "Mr. Kerr, is it true that the devil goes about like a roaring lion?" "It must be true," he replied, "for it is in the Bible." A shrill voice came from the corner: "Then wha keeps his fire in when he's gaun aboot?" Dr. Kerr also tells an anecdote of a woman who had just lost her husband, and the minister calling to condole with her found her sitting in front of a large bowl of porridge. "Terrible loss, terrible loss," sighed the minister. "Aye," was the reply, "it's a terrible loss to me. I've just been greetin' a' nicht, and as sune as I finish this wee drap porridge, I'm just gaun to begin again."



An old settler.—From N. Y. "Wise."

Anecdotal.

Philip II. sent a young nobleman to Rome to congratulate Sixtus V. on his exaltation. Sixtus was dissatisfied at so young an ambassador being sent, and, with his usual frankness, said, "Does your master want men, that he sends to me a beardless ambassador?" "Had my sovereign thought," replied the haughty Spaniard, "that merit consisted in a beard, he would have sent you a goat."

Charles Kean and James Wallack were once playing in the private theater at Windsor Castle, and the actors were somewhat chilled by the lack of hearty applause to which they were accustomed in public. At the end of one act there was a slight suggestion of hand-clapping and exceedingly gentle foot-tapping. Wallack, pricking up his ears, enquired, "What is that?" "That, my dear Wallack," Kean replied, "is applause." "Bless me!" exclaimed Wallack. "I thought it was somebody shelling peas."

Bishop Potter is accused of having given currency to the following anecdote: A Chicagoan had been taken around Boston all day to observe her bulwarks, but had failed to exhibit any of those symptoms of paralysis which are acceptable to the Bostonian mind. "Now confess," said the Bostonian host, after the burden and heat of the day, "isn't Boston a unique town?" "Unique?" mused the Westerner; "I believe that word is derived from two Latin words, unus, one, and equus, horse. I think Boston is a unique town."

Walter Dean, sr., once hired an artist to paint his portrait, with the stipulation that the picture would not be accepted and paid for unless it looked like himself. When the portrait was completed it was sent to Mr. Dean, who did not recognize himself, and absolutely refused to pay the painter. The painter sued, and Joe Strong, the artist, was called in to give an expert opinion. "You see the portrait of Mr. Dean?" the lawyer asked. "No," said Mr. Strong, "I do not." "There it is," said the lawyer, pointing to the big canvas. "I don't call that a portrait; I call that a map of Mr. Dean," said Mr. Strong.

"Down in South Carolina," says Congressman Talbert, "I once attended a colored church. The preacher, one of those negroes with an oily face and big spectacles, was talking about the prophets. He had taken an hour to discourse upon the major prophets, and then he took up the minor ones. In course of time he reached Hosea. 'My breddren,' he exclaimed, 'we come now to Hosea. Let us consider him. Where shall we put Hosea?' At that moment an old negro, who had been peacefully slumbering in one of the back pews, woke up and looked at the pastor. 'Hosea can take my seat,' he said. 'I'm so —— tired that I am going home.'"

The "Evening Post" of New York narrates that on Washington's birthday a well-known New York caterer became the possessor of a pair of English soles and English pheasants, and invited a couple of friends to dine off them at the dog show. It was a great success, but one of the guests, remembering the day, said it was far from patriotic. "Why," he added, "here it is Washington's birthday and we are dining on English sole, pheasant and currant jelly, eating French bread and drinking French wine. Let's have something American. Why don't you serve some oleomargarine?" "Don't worry," was the reply, "you've got it."

"Good Words" prints a little story of the early schooldays of Lord Salisbury, when he was Lord Robert Cecil, which shows how soon in his life his conspicuous disregard for dress began. When he was about seven years old he came into the nursery one afternoon on his return from school, which was held at the old rectory outside Hatfield, and dumped his books into a corner. "Oh, Betty," he said to his old nurse, "I wish I was a cat!" "La, Lord Robert," Betty replied, "how can you wish yourself a beast?" "Oh," he replied, with a sigh, "when I think of how many times I must dress and undress before I die I wish my clothes grew on my back."

Some years ago a Philadelphia preacher inaugurated in his Sunday-school the practice of having the children quote some Scriptural text as they dropped their pennies into the contribution box. On the first Sunday in question, a little shaver walked up and said: "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and in dropped his penny. "Charity shall cover a multitude of sins," and in dropped the next. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," quoted the third, and so on. Just then, up walked a little fellow with the unmistakable remnants of molasses candy on his chubby face, and, as he dropped his cent, he bawled out: "A fool and his money are soon parted."

The Wit's Hour of Trial.

Repartee is like tennis. The ball is driven backward and forward from one player to the other, and the one on whose side it last strikes is the loser. It is a terrible thing for an artist at repartee to find that he has no answer. The mere pretender does not care. He will answer something, to the point or not; but the artist will not debase his art with a bad answer; he merely sorrows for a good one.

There was a little Irishman who kept a liquor shop, and he was noted for always having a reply ready. One day a man came in, laid a dollar bill on the bar and called for whiskey. The proprietor set out the bottle and a glass, and the customer filled the glass right up to the top. "Is it a towel you'd be wantin'?" the proprietor asked, implying thereby that the customer had poured out a bath, rather than a drink.

"Look here," said the customer, pointing to the money, "there's a dollar, you can take the price of this drink out of it, and if there isn't enough, tell me how much more you want and I'll pay it but I don't want any talk from a little Mick of a bartender."

The proprietor picked up the dollar and laid down 85 cents. As the customer disappeared he walked around in front of the bar and said to a friend who sat there: "Casey, I'd have given me liquor shop to have knowed what to answer back to that man."

PUBLIC NOTICE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that, after this notice has been posted up for one month in six public places in the Municipality and published weekly for four successive weeks in a newspaper published in the Municipality, the Council of the Town of Peterborough propose to pass a by-law authorizing the Peterborough Radial Railway Company to lay out, construct and operate its railway on, upon and along any of the streets of the Town of Peterborough (except Crescent street).

The said Council will at its regular meeting to be held on the 2nd day of June, 1902, hear in person or by counsel anyone whose property may be prejudicially affected by such proposed railway, who desires to be heard, and any person so heard may appeal to the Railway Committee of the Executive Council of Ontario against such By-law.

The proposed agreement for said franchise is on file in the office of the Town Clerk and may be examined by anyone interested.

Dated this 6th day of May, 1902.

—The death is announced of Mrs. (Captain) Bien, formerly of Peterborough, but latterly residing in British Columbia. The deceased was well known in Peterborough, Lakefield and Cobourg.

—The Strickland Canoe Co., of Lakefield, have just shipped a number of canoes to South Africa. This speaks something for the widespread popularity of the Lakefield canoes.

—There will be "standing room only" on the market square tomorrow night, when the election returns come in. The Times will display the returns by lime light.

—Mr. Cooney, the caretaker of Victoria Park, reports to The Times the theft of a quantity of rubber hose from the park on Monday night. It is really too bad that such miscreants are allowed to escape.

—The Kingston Street Railway has purchased from Mr. V. Eastwood, of Peterborough, the rolling stock of the Belleville Street Railway. This includes four cars, two trucks, five motors, wires, trolleys etc. The stock will be taken from Belleville to Kingston next week.

—The excursion of the employees of the Stanley Piano Co., will take place on Saturday, June 14th, to Jubilee Point. A strong committee was appointed to arrange the details, with Mr. Joe Halpany as chairman and Mr. G. L. Hay as secretary. The steamer City of Peterborough has been engaged for the occasion and will leave at 2 p.m. on the above date. The 57th band will be in attendance. Last year the excursion was most successful and the surplus was kindly handed over to one of the town charitable institutions.

Non-Jury Sittings

The non-jury sittings of the High Court of Justice, were to have opened at one o'clock yesterday before His Honour Mr. Justice Robertson, but owing to His Lordship not being able to reach Peterborough yesterday the sittings will not commence until tomorrow. There is only one case, being that of foreclosure. The plaintiffs are the Central Canada Loan and Savings Co., and the defendant a Mr. Porter, of Manvers, Durham County.

DROWNED NEAR BUCKHORN

WILLIAM SMITH, A RIVER DRIVER LOSES HIS LIFE

He was an Employee of the Dickson Co., and was Running the Rapids on a Saw Log When He Was Swept off and Drowned

A fatal drowning accident occurred yesterday on the Mississauga River, about seven miles from Buckhorn, when a man named William Smith, an employee of the Dickson Company lost his life.

It appears that the unfortunate man was running the rapids on a sawlog, when it struck a rock, and he was precipitated into the water and drowned. He made a vain attempt to swim back to the log, but the current was too strong, and he sank when within 25 feet of the shore. His body was recovered twenty minutes later, but life was extinct.

The deceased, who was only 24 years of age, was a son of Mr. John Smith, who resides at the corner of Stewart and Sherbrooke streets, town. He is well known here, and his untimely end will be much regretted. The remains were brought to town yesterday evening for interment.

The Board then adjourned until the evening of Monday, June 30th, 1902.

THE EAST RIDING

Mr. Anderson's Final Meeting at Westwood To-Night

Mr. William Anderson, the government candidate in East Peterborough, is conducting a vigorous campaign. On Monday night Mr. Anderson held a mass meeting in Fife's school house, near Hastings. Last night he held a meeting at Villiers, and tonight the last gun will be fired at Westwood. He has been assisted in his meetings by Messrs Blezard, O'Connell and Roger. Mr. R. F. McWilliams has been doing splendid work for Mr. Anderson by attending Dr. Ford's meetings.

HONEST DOCTOR

Speaks of Coffee Drinking

About coffee drinking, Dr. Howe: says "I have the best of reasons for naming coffee as among the most dangerous of slow poisons. My own personal experience outside of the general experience gained by my practice has taught the truth.

At about 16 I became a member of a young people's society whose pledge barred the use of all intoxicants, tobacco, tea and coffee, until the age of 21. I kept my pledge and early temperate habits were formed. Up to about my 30th year I was an athlete; no one had better health or spirits.

A short time after passing thirty I began the use of coffee at breakfast with an occasional cup at evening parties. The first symptoms of ill health I remember came soon and later, sore mouth and stomach trouble. Finally well marked dyspepsia supervened. My bowels sympathized of course, also my nervous system became impaired. Dizziness attacked me, and tremulant hands rendered writing exceedingly difficult. My diet had to be restricted. Experienced medical advisors forbade all fruits.

Several attacks of gastritis trouble me and bowel complaint became quite frequent. The shadow of melancholia menaced me and caused me to wonder why a man of my lineage, strength and endurance and temperate habits should be thus afflicted.

Eminent specialists named it, 'miasm,' others as noted said, 'microbes.' I now say "coffee arabica.' Why? Because for the first thirty years I did not drink coffee and enjoyed good health, the second thirty years coffee drinking became a habit and illness more than kept peace with the indulgence.

I am now past 60 years of age. About 18 months ago I saw a shrewdly written statement of Postum Cereal Coffee. I gave it careful reading and thought, and as an experiment substituted Postum for Java and Mocha. For the first three days of the change I felt, keenly, the loss of the stimulant, after that the nutrient quality of the drink more than compensated the deprivation, and an astonishing change came in recurring hunger three times daily; I could scarcely wait for meals, a sensation I had not had for more than thirty years.

Now my health is excellent. I eat fruits of all kinds and food as my appetite demands. I am regaining my nervous tone and my strength is increasing daily. Except my change from coffee to Postum I have made no change in my mode of living.

Do you wonder that I name coffee as among the most dangerous of slow poisons?

I believe there are thousands suffering as I suffered with a better excuse for ignorance than I can offer," A. C. Howe, M. D., 601 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Paine's Celery Compound Cures a Lady's Neuralgia, Banishes Nervous Debility and Builds Up Her Whole System

The Wondrous Medicine Gives a New and Happy Life After a Long Term of Terrible Sufferings

Neuralgia sufferers are liable to profound derangements of the nervous system, such as paralysis, epilepsy, hypochondriasis, softening of the brain and insanity.

Neuralgia is usually seated in the face or head, attacking some important nerve or nerves; it may exist in any part of the body. The pains are violent, sharp and rending.

The constitutional causes of neuralgia are, general impairment of the health, mental or physical depressing influences, sleeplessness, debility and rheumatic tendencies.

If you suffer from neuralgia, your condition is one of extreme danger. Rest assured there is no royal or select road for any man or woman to the goal of security and health. You need the virtues of Paine's Celery Compound, the medicine which has rescued thousands of neuralgic sufferers from danger and death—which is now prescribed by our best and ablest physicians for dangerous neuralgia.

Mrs. M. Young, Jarvis Street, Toronto, writes as follows: "I was a terrible sufferer from neuralgia and nervous debility, and was extremely weak and rundown. While in this condition I tried almost all kinds of medicines without a shadow of improvement. My sister finally persuaded me to try your Paine's Celery Compound. The first bottle helped me wonderfully, and, after having used six bottles my health is restored and I am now a new woman. I am pleased to say that Paine's Celery Compound is all you represent it to be—a banisher of disease and a health restorer. I thank God and Paine's Celery Compound for my renewed health and strength."

More Money for Bank Clerks.

It is understood that the management of the Bank of Montreal have taken into consideration the increased cost of living while making up the schedules of salary increases this year. The average advance in salaries amounts to about 17 per cent., but in addition an extra living allowance has been made for the clerks in the Toronto and Montreal offices now receiving less than $1,500 per year. The rumor is current in financial circles that a similar step in the matter of a living allowance is to be taken by the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Standard Bank, the Bank of Toronto, and probably one or two other city institutions. The year has been a most successful one for the banks, and there is a good prospect of the allowance being granted.

PETERBORO PRESBYTERY MEET AT SPRINGVILLE

The Presbytery of Peterborough met yesterday afternoon at two o'clock at Springville. There were present: Rev. J. G. Potter, Moderator and Rev. Messrs. J. W. McIntosh, M.A., South Monoghan; W. M. Kannawin, B.D., Omemee; E. F. Torrance, D.D.; J. A. Wilson, B.A., George Yule; Wm. Bennett, Peterborough; W. L. Atkinson, B.A., Warsaw; Wm. Beattie, Cobourg; Wm. Johnston, Millbrook; S. G. Sinclair, Port Hope; D. A. Hamilton, B.A., Havelock; D. A. Thompson, Hastings; Messrs. W. Fowler, Peterborough, and D. McIntosh, Warsaw, elders.

The call of Rev. D. A. Hamilton, of Havelock from Hornings Mills was considered. The Rev. P. W. Anderson, of Shelburne, Ont., represented the Orangeville Presbytery in its desire to have Mr. Hamilton translated. After consideration it was decided to grant the translation. The pulpit of Havelock Presbyterian church will be declared vacant on Sudnay, June 8th. The Rev. A. C. Reeves, B.A., was appointed interim moderator.

The Presbytery then proceeded to ordain and induct the Rev. George Yule into the pastoral charge of Springville and Bethany. Divine worship was conducted by the Rev. Wm. Beattie, of Cobourg, who preached a very able sermon from the first chapter of Isaiah.

Rev. J. W. McIntosh who has been guiding the affairs of the congregation during the vacancy, narrated the steps which had been taken in securing a pastor.

The Moderator then put the customary question to Mr. Yule, and with solemn prayer, and the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, he was ordained to the work of the ministry, and received the right hand of fellowship of each member of Presbytery. Mr. Yule was then suitably addressed by Rev Wm Johnston, Millbrook and the congregation received words of counsel from Rev. D. A. Thompson, of Hastings. The Rev. Messrs Bennett and Torrance added words full of good cheer to people and pastor.

After luncheon provided by the ladies, the choir of Bethany Presbyterian church rendered suitable selections, and all members of Presbytery gave three minute speeches. Rev. Mr. Johnston, Methodist minister at Bethany, and the Rev. P. W. Anderson, both visitors, also spoke. Mr Yule, the newly ordained pastor, then spoke in very helpful and stirring words and a very successful service was brought to a close.

The Presbytery then proceeded to the examination of Mr. J. A. Wilson, B.A. a graduate of Knox College, Toronto, and assistant at St. Paul's, Peterborough. The customary questions having been answered satisfactorily Mr. Wilson was licensed to preach.

His Majesty Decides Many Things in Connection with Coronation

BRILLIANT SOCIAL EVENTS

Canadians and Americans Have Not Appeared Yet in Large Numbers

Special to The Times.

London, May 29.—Coronation scaffolding now fills every thoroughfare of the route of the Royal progress in June, and the Abbey is hardly visible from Whitehall, on account of the carpentry barricades. Every day the newspapers print a fresh column of announcements and preparations for the coronation, and complex as is the mass of detail, evidence of the unity of direction and systematic supervision is not lacking.

Gradually the dates for the state events of the coronation revel have been assigned, and the Marchioness of Lansdowne and other great hostesses are now arranging dinners and receptions for the remaining [illegible].

Ascot week will be the most brilliant social outing, and there will be large country house parties for it, with a ball in the Waterloo chamber, Windsor, as the culminating event.

Chippendale chairs for the Peeresses of the Abbey is a detail which reveals the pains taken to minister to the comfort of spectators.

The Duke of Norfolk is doing the bulk of the work of management, but the King is consulted at every turn. He decides everything quickly, and does not change his mind.

Canadian and American visitors have not yet appeared in large numbers, but the hotels are likely to be crowded with them in June.

THE FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

London, May 29.—The King, appreciating the beneficent work of the friendly societies, has commanded that they shall be represented at the Coronation ceremony in Westminster Abbey; and invitations have been sent to the following members of the Friendly Societies' Conference:

Mr. J. L. Stead, permanent secretary, Ancient Order of Foresters; Mr. A. Chapman, Parliamentary agent, Ancient Order of Foresters; Mr. W. Marlow, permanent secretary, Ancient Order of Shepherds; Mr. J. J. Stockdale, Parliamentary Agent, Manchester Unity of Oddfellows; Mr. W. G. Bunn, Hearts of Oak; Mr. T. Lichfield, N.D.I.C.; Mr. G. White, Grand United Order of Oddfellows; Mr. J. C. Cleveland, National Independent Order of Oddfellows; Mr. J. Boyd, Ancient Order of Free Gardeners; Mr. R. Vallender; Mr. W. Wightman, London County Council; and Mr. R. Campbell, Independent Order of Rechabites.

Equal Suffrage in Austral

Special to The Times.

Sydney, N.S.W., May 28.—The New South Wales parliament met and organized today. Especial interest attaches to the session as the woman's suffrage bill occupies a prominent place in the legislative programme.

For Study of Negro Problems

Atlanta, Ga., May 28.—The seventh annual conference for the study of the negro problems convened at the Atlanta University to-day. Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee, William Benson of Kowaliga, and representatives from Fisk, Hampton, Prairie View and other institutions are among the participants.

Seattle Terminal for Atlantic Line

Special to The Times.

Seattle, Wash., May 28.—The Great Northern Railway company has decided to make this city the chief eastern terminal of its great line of Atlantic steamships. It is said, unofficially but on reliable authority, that the Hill interests intend building up a large transcontinental, transpacific, coastwise and local trade. Several small steamships already have been purchased to engage in th local and Puget Sound trade. The two great ocean freighters, now under course of construction, in a short time will be ready to place on the run between this city and Asiatic ports.

Gotham Welcomes French Visitors

New York, May 28.—The distinguished French visitors who came over to attend the dedication of the Rochambeau monument arrived in New York this afternoon and receive a welcome that could not fail but leave a pleasant memory. The party landed at the Battery and were escorted by Squadron A and other military organizations to the City Hall, where the visitors were welcomed by Mayor Low. They then proceeded to the Waldorf-Astoria, where the Mayor returned the visit, and the delegation, headed by M. Cambon, received the French residents of the city. This evening the visitors are to be the guests of the Society of the Cincinnati at dinner at the Metropolitan club.

Charities and Correction

Detroit, Mich., May 28.—Nearly one thousand men and women working together or by their common interest for the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor, the rescue of children from vicious surroundings, the reformation of criminals and the uplifting of the submerged, are in Detroit to-day to attend the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the National Conference of Charities and Correction. The visitors come from all parts of the United States, from Canada and from Mexico, and include among their number business and professional men, trustees and superintendents of asylums and correctional institutions, city and state officials, matrons of police stations and representative club women. In the number and representative character of the delegates, this conference is the most notable ever held in America, and probably in the world. [illegible]

The conference formally opens this evening with a meeting in the Central Methodist Church, Governor Bliss and Mayor Maybury will deliver addresses of welcome, and the response will be embodied in annual address of the president, Hon. Timothy Nicholson, of Richmond, Ind. A reception at the Hotel Cadillac in honor of the delegation follows the meeting.

The business sessions begin to-morrow and continue until next Wednesday. The programme is notable for the wide range of topics embraced in the papers and discussions and the prominence of the participants. Some of the subjects to be exhaustively discussed are needy families in their homes; destitute and neglected children; insanity; juvenile delinquents; prison reforms; the feeble-minded and epileptic; neighborhood and civic improvements; the treatment of criminals; the housing of the poor, and hospitals, dispensaries and nursing. Papers or addresses will be presented by William Dudley Foulke, United States civil service commissioner; Joseph P. Byers, of the board of state charities of Ohio; Dr. Alfred Myer of New York, S. C. Lowenstein of the Federation of Jewish Charities, Cincinnati; Dr. Martin W. Barr of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Emilio Martinez, president of the Cuban Society for the Study of Tuberculosis. The conference sermon is to be delivered Sunday afternoon by Bishop Spalding of Peoria.

A Destructive Storm

The storm which passed over Peterborough on Monday was very destructive, Mr. Stephen Payne, market gardener, who resides on the outskirts of the town in North Monaghan, had his greenhouse windows broken and crops destroyed to the extent of about $200. Hail as large as marbles fell, and destroyed everything that was young and tender.

American Competition

Special to The Times.

London, May 29.—The bug-a-boo of American competition will not down. A London paper prints the following statement giving a few facts regarding the strides of American commerce.

[illegible] was 541,831 tons, as compared with 466 [illegible] tons in 1900. The production of the United States figured in these totals for 281,111 tons and 269,111 tons respectively, year as a copper-producing region, but Spain and Portugal ranked second last their output was only 55,000 tons in 1901 and 582,277 tons in 1900.

Experiments which have been made with American gas coal at Copenhagen shows that the American product stands as high as the English coal as regards its gas producing powers, while the quality of the coke obtained is said to be somewhat better than that secured from English gas coal. Increasing quantities of shoes, cotton goods, shirts, hardware, and coal are now being imported into Jamaica from the United States.

NEAR THE CLOSE

British Statesmen Believe That the War is Almost Ended

London, May 29.—The Mail's Pretoria correspondent states that the Boers have accepted the British terms, and a proclamation has been prepared announcing the fact, and will be posted to-morrow. There will still be some irreconcilables to deal with, which will require the services of a large army.

London, May 28.—The reassembling of Parliament did little toward clearing the situation in South Africa. A [illegible] House listened to non-committal explanations from Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain, and settled down to perfunctory debate on supply, after Mr. Gerald Balfour had glibly rattled off the percentages of the tonnage of the White Star and Dominion lines to the entire British commercial marine. The belief that peace would be definitely arranged in a few days was generally held in the [illegible], and was based upon the opinion that the ministers and the Boer leaders had gone too far to turn back.

There were various versions of a Boer despatch in circulation toward midnight with a feeling of increased confidence that the war was practically at an end. The rumors that either the extra penny on the income tax or the flour and grain registry tax would be dropped were clearly premature. Even if peace be concluded this week, no material reduction in the military forces can be ordered for a long period. The buoyancy of feeling was unmistakable on the ministerial side. Consols again advanced sharply. Heavy buying orders were reported from America and the continent.

The suggestion that the King is so anxious to have peace before the coronation that he is bringing pressure to bear upon the ministers to make large concessions to the Boers is [illegible] in official circles. The King is described as not less patriotic than Queen Victoria was before him, and as equally mindful of the obligations of a constitutional ruler to be guided by the advice of his ministers. The King can hardly be more anxious for peace than the ministers or the country.

A certain [illegible] in yesterday's optimism in regard to early peace in South Africa was perceptible last night. The same organs that declare that the Cabinet's reply of Friday to the Boer proposals was the final stage of England's part in the present negotiations, now explain that the cabinet meeting to-day has to frame fresh replies to fresh Boer demands. A semi-official announcement that the result is not expected before Friday has provoked an outburst of impatience.

IMMIGRANTS POURING IN

The Number Coming in Unprecedented in the History of the Country

Winnipeg, Man., May 28.—The present year promises to break all records in the volume of immigration to the Northwest. For two months the newcomers have been pouring into Winnipeg at the rate of a dozen carloads weekly, and from this they have scattered all over the Northwest. A number of the foreigners came from Finland, the number of Finns far exceeding the Swedes and Norwegians who formerly were in a majority. The bulk of the Finns push on westward to the farming regions of the Northwest. There also has been a large number of Italian immigrants this season. It is a noticeable fact that the immigrants this year are a far better class than those who have arrived in former years.

French visitors at Niagara.

Buffalo, N.Y., May 28.—General Brugere and his fellow members of the French mission to the Rochambeau dedication visited Niagara Falls to-day. The visitors reached Buffalo shortly after 8 o'clock this morning and before leaving for the Falls a visit was paid to the City Hall where the party was received and welcomed by Mayor Knight and a committee of representative citizens. The afternoon was spent in viewing the Falls and at 4 p.m. the party left over the New York Central for West Point.

TRY TO KILL A PRINCE

Governor of Kharkoff Object of Murderous Plot.

St. Petersburg, May 28.—A report has reached here of an attempt to assassinate Prince Obolensky, governor of the government of Kharkoff, who was commended by the czar for suppressing the rioting among the peasants of that district.

Peasants and political prisoners have been whipped at Bialystok and other Polish towns.

Eighty persons who were arrested for taking part in revolutionary disturbances at Saratoff, were confined in a private building there. A number of rioters concentrated in the vicinity of the building contemplated a release.

The rioters were charged several times by the troops before they dispersed and the liberation of the prisoners thus prevented.

Armed with daggers and sticks the townspeople of Ghirzel, in the Caucasus have liberated a score of prisoners who claimed they were innocent.

United Presbyterian Assembly

Pittsburg, Pa., May 28.—The fiftieth annual general assembly of the United Presbyterian church of North America meets to-night in the Eighth Presbyterian church of Allegheny. A large number of delegates have arrived, and the attendance promises to be unusually large. The reports of the officers and committees will show the condition of the denomination to be better than ever before. The present enrollment amounts to 1,000 ministers and 900 churches, with over 3,000 elders, while the total membership reaches 120,000, and the contributions to the Boards about $850,000. Indications point to the election of the Rev. Dr. John Calvin Boyd as moderator of the assembly for the coming year, to succeed Rev. J. A. Thomson, D. D., of Missouri, the present moderator.

Our Common Cause of Headache

Perhaps the most general cause of headache and pain across the eyes is nasal catarrh. The simplest cure is to inhale the medicated vapor of Catarrhozone which traverses every air cell and air passage of the throat, lungs and nose. It kills myriads of germs at every breath, clears away mucous discharges, preserves and heals the membrane. Catarrhozone is just a splendid remedy for headache and its action is certain and unfailing in diseases of the throat and lungs, deafness, bronchitis, asthma and catarrh. A trial will convince the most sceptical that Catarrhozone is all right. Large size $1; trial size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co. Kingston, Ont.

Non-Jury Sittings

The non-jury sittings of the High Court of Justice, were to have opened at one o'clock yesterday before His Lordship Mr. Justice [illegible], but owing to His Lordship not being able to reach Peterborough yesterday the sittings will not commence until tomorrow. There is only one case, being that of foreclosure. The plaintiffs are the Central Canada Loan and Savings Co., and the defendant a Mr. Porter, of Balsover, Durham County.

The Only Thing Really Needed

Is lots of red and vitalizing blood to nourish and invigorate the body. If your blood is thin and watery use "Ferrozone." It supplies the necessary elements, such as phosphorus and iron, and quickly restores lost strength and vigor. Ferrozone is an unequalled restorative for the tired, the sick and the run down; it stimulates the appetite, aids digestion, soothes the nerves and makes the system too healthy for disease to exist. Nothing does so much good in a short time as Ferrozone. Get it to-day from any druggist for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

THE RING

San Francisco, Cal., May 29.—"Kid" Lavigne, the ex-lightweight champion, and Jimmy Britt, the clever California fighter, have completed their work of preparation, and are in readiness for their twenty-round go before the San Francisco Athletic club to-night. Both appear in good condition for the bout. It is probable the winner will be matched to meet "Kid" Parker. [illegible]

CAMPAIGN NOTES

This is Chooseday.

• • • •

Stratton is a sure winner.

Mr. Stratton has the people with him.

• • • •

A vote for Stratton is a vote for Peterborough.

• • • •

It is a sad sight to observe our Tory friends have again taken to the Bole.

• • • •

Peterborough expects every man to do his duty to-morrow.

• • • •

A vote for Stratton tomorrow means a vote for the advancement of Peterborough's interests.

• • • •

Every man owes it to the town to-morrow to vote for Peterborough's progressive minister.

• • • •

A special despatch from Toronto says that the opponents of Mr. Stratton in West Peterborough have not yet ordered their fireworks.

• • • •

With peace in South Africa and Stratton elected in West Peterborough, the British Empire will move forward swimmingly.

• • • •

The latest attempt to influence the electors to refrain from voting for Mr. Stratton was loaded the wrong way, and is likely to prove a veritable boomerang.

• • • •

Electors! be true to your own interests and the interests of Peterborough and vote for Stratton.

• • • •

The honest electors of West Peterborough will resent the unworthy and unwarranted tactics of Mr. Stratton's opponents.

• • • •

Mr. Stratton has faithfully represented this riding for 16 years, and it would b foolish to think of a change when he is in a position to do so much good.

• • • •

Mr. Stratton is worthy of the support of the electors of West Peterborough because he has always been foremost in promoting their welfare.

• • • •

There is only one kind of Victory that would be fitting for the present occasion in West Peterborough: Give Mr. Stratton an increased majority.

• • • •

The local Tory organ says that Mr. Stratton has been disqualified. This is on a par with many others of its statements, and shows that our contemporary is still unmindful of the fate of Ananias.

• • • •

The efforts of Mr. Stratton's opponents to alarm the electors have failed. The hard-headed, thinking people take no stock in the bluff regarding the printing of the ballots.

• • • •

The Belleville Intelligencer heads its political department "A Lying Campaign." That is very appropriate, so far as West Peterborough is concerned. Mr. Stratton's opponents stop at nothing.

• • • •

The practical men of West Peterborough, of all classes, fully realize that they do not want to make experiments which may jeopardize their position. They will vote for Stratton, who has done all that a public man could do to deserve their support, to make known the traffic and industrial facilities of Peterborough to advance its material interests and to maintain its position as the foremost town of the Dominion.

AN IMPERTINENT REQUEST

Evidently Mr. Stratton's opponents are not particularly as to the methods they use to carry on their rather infamous campaign. Made desperate by the certainty of Mr. Stratton's assured victory, they resort to all sorts of questionable manoeuvers to bolster a lost cause.

Perhaps the most glaring piece of audacity ever known in the locality was the notice issued this morning to the electors, signed by Mr. Miller's agent. This precious document states that the electors are "required" to take notice that "any ballot marked by you (the elector) for the said J. R. Stratton x x x will be absolutely void and of no effect, and any vote cast for the said J. R. Stratton will in fact be thrown away"

Could anything go further in the direction of unfairness, untruth and impudence? The electors will NOT lose their votes, for Mr. Stratton has committed no illegal act, and is therefore not disqualified. Such disgraceful tactics will be found to be of little avail in promoting Mr. Miller's interests. Indeed one prominent merchant told The Times this morning that he had intended to vote for Mr. Miller, but changed his mind when he read the latest election roorback of Mr. Stratton's opponents. We appeal to all lovers of British fair-play to show their disapproval of such methods to-morrow by voting for J. R. Stratton, Peterborough's faithful servant for so many years.

THE TIMES SUPPORTS MR. STRATTON

Because it believes that it is in the interests of Peterborough that we should have a cabinet minister as our representative.

Because he has represented Peterborough faithfully for 16 years.

Because Peterborough has reached that critical stage in its history when none but men of experience and influence should be elected to represent in Parliament.

Because he has always taken a deep active interest in everything that went to promote the welfare of the town.

Because he is in a position to do much for Peterborough.

Because he has always had for his motto: Peterborough first, last and always.

Because he has been actively identified with the business of Peterborough all his life and has, as a citizen, member of the Legislature, and member of the Cabinet, gained an influence and a prominence in the business world that will enable him to interest in Peterborough financiers and capitalists who have money to invest in manufactures.

Because he has persistently talked Peterborough in every part of the Province and the Dominion.

Because every thinking elector knows in his heart that the business interests, the manufacturing interests, and all the varied interests of the Town and County of Peterborough will be best served by electing Mr. Stratton as its representative in the Legislature.

Because every elector knows that a representative, who is also a Minister of the Crown, is in a position to do more for the Town and County than a private member.

Because every elector who has the interest, the growth, the future and the prosperity of the Town at heart will acknowledge that these will best be promoted by retaining the services of the representative who has served the riding so well in the past.

A vote for Stratton is
A vote for Peterborough,
A vote for Peterborough's progress,
A vote for a permanent policy of progress.

FOUR YOUNGSTERS IN GREAT PERIL.

There is much alarm at Port Credit regarding the safety of four lads of that village named George Johnston, aged 17; Harry Stewart, aged 14; his brother, Bert, aged 12 years, and Eddie McBride, aged 14 years. They obtained a boat yesterday evening and went away in it. Which direction they took is not known, but, as there was a strong off-shore wind blowing and as the night was very cold it is feared the boys may have been blown out on the lake and may all have perished.

In great anxiety, James McBride, father of one of the missing lads, drove in from Port Credit this morning and reported the matter to the Parkdale police, after sending a despatch to Hamilton as well, and making enquiries along the road.

When it is remembered that the oldest is only 17, while one is only 12, it is not probable that any of them appreciated the danger of an off-shore wind. The parents are distracted over the affair.

A NEW SYSTEM TO BE ADOPTED.

Montreal, Que., May 27.—As a consequence of an arrest made here on the charge of smuggling by Chief of Detectives Carter, at the instance of Chief Inspector Jones of the Customs Department, it is probable that an entire change will be made in the system of examining baggage coming into Canada from the United States.

Lewis Henry was arrested, charged with smuggling jewellery into Canada to the value of $7,000. Henry is in the wine-making business and imported this jewellery consisting of watches, diamonds, rings, and other articles to New York, paying there, and so he shipped it as ordinary baggage to this city. By some means he got the trunks through without examination, and it was only by an accident that the customs officials got wind of the affair. It is understood the customs department will at once adopt the United States system all along the border, station customs officers in the chief United States centres and hold all baggage at the border which has not been examined and passed.

that of a recent date contains the official statement of the British Treasury returns of expenses for the wars in South Africa and China. Up to March of this year the former war has cost $796,870,000, while the estimated expenses for the current year will bring these figures to $ 1,114,870,000. The cost of the China campaign will add $26,000,000 more to this total. To pay the war bills of the year and also meet a deficit in the ordinary expenditures the ordinary revenue would have had to be increased by $80,000,000. The treasury will receive for the four years of the war up to March, 1903, $340,000,000 from taxes, leaving $775,000,000 to be obtained by the convenient method of adding it to the national debt, which will be a charge for years. It is little wonder that the English people are anxious for a successful issue of the present negotiations with the Boers.

NOTHING LIKE
FOR HEALTH RESULTS

A breakfast grain food that fails to give health and strength to young and old, is dear at any price. While this is true, it is wonderful how habit and custom have so long led and deceived many worthy people.

The ordinary breakfast foods used by many, such as oatmeal, cracked wheat, cornmeal and hominy, no doubt appease the pangs of hunger; their usefulness ends there. These foods instead of benefitting health, retard and impair digestion; they inflame the blood and lower vitality.

Malt Breakfast Food is a scientific health food; it is a concentrated nourishment adapted for the strengthening of young and old. Its delicious nutty flavor, its soothing effect on the stomach of the strong and weak, its energy producing virtues, all combine to make it a food of extraordinary value. Malt Breakfast Food sustains life for the sick when all other forms of nourishment are rejected. It chases away indigestion and stomach troubles, and creates a healthy appetite. Ask your grocer for it.

Ship From Volcano Scene Arrives at Philadelphia

One of the Grandest and at the Same Time Most Horrible Sights Ever Witnessed—The Great Tidal Wave

Wilmington, Del., May 27 — The British steamship Whitgrift, commanded by Captain Charles Whymper, arrived here this afternoon fresh from the zone of the volcanic eruptions in the West Indian Islands. On May 16 she touched at St. Lucia, 40 miles from Martinique. The Captain says that when he left St. Lucia the people were in a state of panic, and many of the women and children were being removed to places of supposed safety. Business was considerably interfered with, as the people were in dread of a volcanic eruption on that island.

The Whitgrift's hull is scarred and rusty, and gray volcanic dust is still clinging to her spars and decks.

"Of Martinique itself I only got a distant view, says Captain Whymper. "We gave the island a wide berth, yet we passed within three miles, near enough to see that the work of destruction was complete.

"We had been sailing over smooth seas until we approached within 40 miles of St. Pierre. Then the sea was lashed into fury and our heavily-laden ship was tossed about as a cork. Martinique lay toward the northeast. A dense mass of smoke hid the island. Mont Pelee was sending up dense volumes of smoke, dust, fire and stones. When the wind blew the smoke away we could see no signs of habitation. Everything had been destroyed.

"For nearly one hundred miles dust fell thickly. It took us a day to pass through it.

"I passed under the stern of the Roddam. It was the most abject wreck I ever saw afloat. Her spars, funnels and upper works were gone. What little woodwork remained was charred and blackened. Eighteen of her men were lying dead on the decks."

Captain Whymper says he saw Captain Chas. Freeman, of the boat, lying in the hospital, and fears that he will never be able to be about again.

At the Barbadoes the Captain met Samuel A. McAllister, of this city, the United States Consul, who is helping to relieve the surviving inhabitants of the stricken island.

St. Thomas, D.W.I., May 27—Captain Braastad, of the Norwegian steamer, which is here, says:

"We arrived at Fort de France on May 15. When nearing the port we saw a smoke cloud overhanging the island and passed many swollen corpses. At 6 o'clock in the morning of May 20 a tidal wave parted the Helga's hawsers and the steamer went adrift, but was brought to anchor quickly. There was a heavy fall of volcanic matter and the tidal waves recurred rapidly. We sailed for St. Lucia in the afternoon with a number of refugees on board. Passing St. Pierre in the morning of May 22, we found that Mont Pelee was emitting heavy clouds of smoke."

Captain Braastad has in his possession a stone weighing several pounds which fell on the deck of his steamer.

Washington, D. D., May 27—Consul Ayme cabled the State Department from Martinique to-day saying the Admiral of the French flagship Tage has advised him that sufficient supplies to meet the needs of the people of the island for four months are on hand, and suggesting that no further supplies are needed. The American warships now in the French and British West Indies will doubtless be left there so long as they can be of service, and until danger of further serious disasters on Martinique and St. Vincent are passed.

On the morning of May 20, from 4.07 to 4.16 Eastern time, or 5.03 to 5.12 St. Pierre local mean time, there occurred a slight disturbance of the magnetic needles at the Coast and Geodetic Survey magnetic observatory at Cheltenham, Md., beginning abruptly and reaching its maximum effect at 5.07. From 11.57 p.m., May 20, to 0.09 A.m., Eastern time, or from 0.53 to 1.05 a.m., May 21, St. Pierre local mean time, a similar but somewhat larger disturbance occurred.

According to the cable despatch from Fort de France, dated Tuesday, May 20, the second eruption of Mont Pelee apparently began about 5.15 a.m., closely co-incident with the first magnetic disturbance given above.

Respecting the second magnetic disturbance, about midnight of May 20, it is of interest to note that almost continuous earthquake shocks were felt at St. Augustine, Fla., from 9 to midnight, May 02.

Paris, May 27 — The Russian Minister of Finance, M. Witte, in behalf of the Russian Government, has telegraphed 250,000 francs to the Martinique Relief Fund.

The Emperor of Japan has subscribed 10,000 francs to the Martinique Relief Fund.

Roseau, Island of Dominica, B.W.I., May 27.—During the whole of last night ashes from the volcano on the island of Martinique fell here in greater quantity than ever experienced since the outbreak of Mont Pelee.

A Scientist's Report.

Port de France, May 26. — Professor Robert T. Hill, United States Government geologist and head of the expedition sent by the National Geographical Society, has just come in from a daring and prolonged investigation of the volcanic activity in Martinique. Professor Hill chartered a steamer and carefully examined the coast as far north as Port de Macouba, at the extreme end of the island, making frequent landings. After landing at Le Precheur, five miles north of St. Pierre, he walked through an area of active volcanism to the latter place and made a minute examination of the various phenomena disclosed.

Professor Hill is the first and only man who has set foot in the area of craters, fissures, and fumaroles, and, because of his high position as a scientist, his narrative is valuable. In addition to his work of investigation, the professor rescued in his steamer many poor people who had ventured back after deserting their homes and found themselves in awful danger.

He reports as follows: The zone of the catastrophe in Martinique forms an elongated oval, containing, on land, about eight square miles of destruction. This oval is partly over the sea. The land part is bounded by lines running from Le Precheur to the peak of Mont Pelee, then curving around to Carbet. There were three well marked zones, first a centre of annihilation, in which all life, vegetable and animal, was utterly destroyed; the greater northern portion of St. Pierre was in this zone. Second, a zone of singeing, blistering flame, which also was fatal to all life, killing all men and animals, burning the leaves on the trees, and scorching, but not utterly destroying, the trees themselves. Third, a large outer, non-destructive zone, of ashes, wherein some vegetation was injured. The focus of annihilation was the new crater midway between the sea and the peak of Mont Pelee where now exists a new area of active volcanism, with hundreds of fumaroles or miniature volcanoes.

The new crater is, now vomiting black, hot mud, which is falling into the sea. Both craters, the old and new, are active. Mushroom-shaped steam explosions constantly ascend from the old crater, while heavy, ash-laden, clouds float horizontally from the new crater. The old ejecta, steam, smoke, mud, pumice, and lapilli, but no molten lava.

The salient topography of the region is unaltered. The destruction of St. Pierre was due to the new crater. The explosion had great superficial force, acting in radial directions as is evidenced by the dismounting and carrying for yards the guns in the battery on the hill south of St. Pierre and the colonial statue of the Virgin in the same locality and also by the condition of the ruined houses in St. Pierre.

According to the testimony of some persons there was an accompanying flame. Others think the incandescent cinders and the force of their ejection were sufficient to cause the destruction. This must be investigated. I am now following the nature of this hill.

This is the first, positive scientific statement based on observed facts. Prof. Hill has now started on horseback for the volcano. He will study the whole affected area, and will try to get to both craters. He will surely visit Morne Rouge and the slope of Mont Pelee. The undertaking is very hazardous, as explosions may occur at any moment, as one did May 20. Prof. Hill knows the risk he takes, but says the only way to discover exactly what has happened is to go to the crater itself or as near it as possible.

New Source of Fright.

Fort de France is nearly deserted. A new source of fright is fear that a tidal wave may come. A wave eight feet high would certainly destroy Fort de France, and probably cause enormous loss of life.

The weather is lowering and rainy. The south winds carry the smoke and ashes from the volcano away from Fort de France.

In order to avoid a possible epidemic among the seven thousand refugees now at Fort de France it has been decided to distribute them among a number of depots.

The Story of the Black Dog.

By C. K. BURROW.

The following mysterious story is taken from C. W. Burrow's new book, "Patricia of the Hills." The narrator is an elderly lady, Mrs. Charteris, who relates the incident as an example of Irish folk-tale, but who more than half believes it:

MY grandfather, Patrick Gavan, of Fermoy, was a quiet man to look at—slight, neither tall nor short, with a face that was always pale, dead pale, and eyes that never flinched from man or devil. But, though he looked quiet, he was as wild a roystering fellow as ever stepped on two feet, ready to do the first thing that came into his head, good or bad; it was his misfortune that the bad came the easiest. He had a way with him that made him welcome wherever he went, and many a man, and many a woman, too, rued the day that Patrick Gavan's black eyes first crossed theirs. Well, he married at last, and took his bride to the house on the banks of the Blackwater. She was a lovely, sweet creature, gentle and timid, as you may see from her portrait there; they were as badly matched as tiger and fawn, and she soon began to droop. He was not unkind to her; my grandfather never ill-used a woman; but after a time he took to his old ways, and she just sat down and watched and wondered where it would end. He was a terribly hard drinker, but his head was so strong that he himself seldom got drunk, and one of his delights was to get together a dozen of his wildest neighbors at a great dinner, and see them go under the table one by one. When this kind of thing was going on, his wife would sit in her own room and listen and tremble; once she had tried to get in, but the door was locked, which frightened her more than if she had seen the poor fools soaking their brains within. She crept back to her little oratory and spent the night on her knees, praying for herself, husband and the child that was to call him father.

When the child was born, and for a month after, my grandfather was quiet as a lamb; that was the happiest time of the woman's life, for he would carry the boy up and down, and up and down, never tiring, while she watched him from the bed she was too weak to leave. She thought to herself that her prayers were answered, and that Patrick was a changed man; and he saw what was in her mind and kept a tight hold on himself; but after a time the devil got him by the throat again, and he must needs be at the old tricks.

The fancy that took him was to have one of his dinners, and he arranged it all without letting a word reach his wife; but, in case she should hear, he invited Father Coghlan, the priest who had christened the boy, with the rest. When the night came the poor sick lady was lying up in her room, and he went to her before the guests arrived—I dare say feeling remorseful at heart—and sat down with the boy on his knees.

"Is it cold?" she asked.

"Yes, and with snow on the ground," said he.

"I'm sorry for that."

"Why, mo chreidhe?"

"Nothing," she said, and stretched a thin hand to him across the bed. He took it in his and kissed it. "It's a cold little hand," he said.

"As cold as a snowflake," said she, and smiled softly, and asked for the boy. He laid him on her breast, the child that was to be my father, and she closed her eyes and seemed to sleep. Then he went down to receive the mad guests.

After the eating was over and the wine carried in (those were the claret-drinking days, you must remember), my grandfather locked the door, as usual, and clapped a brace of loaded pistols on the table. "The man who stirs from this room," said he, "before the last bottle's empty, knows what to expect."

Everyone there, except Father Coghlan, was used to this business of the pistols. The priest looked from them to the locked door and back at Gavan with a queer light in his eyes, but he said nothing—only rubbed his chin and drew his under lip back over his teeth.

Well, the drinking began, and went on hour after hour. My grandfather sat pale and upright at the head of his table, while the air grew hotter and the fumes of the liquor reeked stronger and stronger; the table was all splashed and dabbled with wine, men's beards were wet with it; some of them fell forward with spread arms and slept; others slipped to the ground and lay there like logs.

I know this is not a pretty story for a woman to tell, but it's true, and I can see it all. God help the men, I say, who did such things!

There Patrick Gavan sat, and his own glass was never empty; neither was the priest's, but when he raised it it was only to moisten his lips. All the time he watched my grandfather, and saw his face grow harder, and gray with a kind of bitter sadness. At last Gavan saw that he was not drinking, and rose.

"Father Coghlan," he said, "drink."

"A host does not command his guests," said the priest.

"I command mine," cried the other.

"I shall not drink, and I bid you open that door and let me go."

My grandfather caught and balanced one of the pistols in his hand.

"You can't frighten me," said the priest. "I command you, in God's name, to open that door, and let me leave this hell's kitchen!"

"Drink!" said Gavan, cocking a trigger.

At that moment Father Coghlan lifted a warning hand.

"Hush!" he said, "I hear a cry!"

"It's the wind."

"It's no wind, but a child or a woman."

"I hear nothing. Drink!"

As the last word left his lips, there came a hurried scratching at the door. A minute later it sounded under the window. The two men looked at each other, the priest had gone as pale as death, but he stood ready, with the fingers of one hand clasped tightly round a cross which he wore. The scratching went on, and my grandfather moved to the window and opened it, still carrying the pistol in his hand. A black dog leaped into the room, and a breath of cold air followed him. The dog's coat was dry, and his feet were dry, and he made no marks upon the polished floor.

The creature ran around and sniffed at the drunken sleepers, turned aside from the priest, and then paused before Gavan, with his eyes shining like coals, and his tongue lolling out at the side of his mouth. It was no dog of my grandfather's, nor had he ever seen it before.

"Go to hell!" he cried, and fired full at its head. The lock snapped, and there the dog still stood, watching, with his wicked eyes fixed on Gavan, and his red tongue quivering. Just then they both heard a cry, clear and shrill as the call of a peewit; the dog lifted his black head, and in a second had jumped through the open window without a sound.

There was no need for the priest to speak again; in a flash my grandfather had the door open, and they both ran upstairs to the wife's room. She was lying dead, with the child asleep on her breast, and on her hand, as plain as letters in a book, was a red mark in the shape of a dog's tongue.

You might have supposed that this would change my grandfather's life. Well, it did, for some years. He looked after the boy, taught him to ride as soon as he could walk, gave him all the freedom that was good for him, and perhaps more, and saw him grow up into a fine healthy lad who could hold his own in any exercise of skill or endurance, and had a sound brain as well. But I think it must be the hardest thing in the world for a man who has once led the kind of life my grandfather was used to to leave it altogether behind him. When the boy no longer needed his personal protection, and the occupation of teaching him had passed to other hands, he began to cast back to the old ways; and if these had been bad in the young man they were ten times worse in the old. Yet he had a curious delicacy in everything that affected my father, gave him good counsel from the deeps of his own experience, and concealed from him the unsound places in his own life. But the lad heard stories and kept his eyes open, and knew many things which his father would have given his heart's blood to conceal. The boy, however, had a clean, upright soul, and his mother's strain to the good; and so escaped the fire.

One day my grandfather rode back with his horse all a-foam from a place some twenty miles away, where he had been on no good errand. Times and customs had changed for the better, and there were no young men to fill up the place of the dead who had been his fellows in his wicked carousals. But there were still five or six left, and these he had bidden to a dinner; my father, he thought, was away, but during the day he had returned, and, hearing what was afloat, had made up his mind to slip into the butler's little room, which opened out of the dining-room, when the servants were dismissed.

When Patrick Gavan reached home it was already evening; he had ridden hard and far, and was in no condition to enter upon the night's work, but that fact made him the more determined to see it through. He dressed hurriedly, and by the time the guests were to arrive he was ready. But the hour struck and passed, and no guests came; and then, turning to the calendar, he found that he had made a mistake in the date, and that that day's preparations should have been made for the morrow. However, he sat down to table, where all the covers were laid, and had every course served, and the wine brought in; and when the time came, he sent the servants away, locked the door, and laid the pistols beside him.

It was winter again, and the night was still and cold. The house was as quiet as an empty room, so that the sound of the Blackwater running at the foot of the garden could be heard where my grandfather sat. He shivered, and threw more logs on the fire, which already blazed like a furnace; then he began to drink.

The hours slipped by until it was past midnight, at which time Gavan rose and addressed each empty place in turn, as though his friends were there, asking them to drink with him; but there were only six places laid, and he called twelve names, and the last that he called was Father Coghlan's.

"Father Coghlan," he cried, "drink!"

He stood with his glass raised, and his gaze fixed at the level of a man's eyes, his pale face set in a grim smile. He saw the priest before him as plainly as I see you, and he must have heard him speak as well, for after a time he said:

"I hear nothing. Drink!"

And then, on a sudden, there came a scratching at the door. The glass slanted in his hand and some wine splashed upon the table; but he steadied himself with an oath, drank, and sat down; still looking toward the place where the priest had sat. Presently the scratching ceased, but a moment later it sounded from beneath the window. At that Gavan's jaw dropped, and a sweat broke out upon his [illegible] face, but he did not stir. The scratching went on, low at first, and then louder and fiercer, until it seemed like a voice calling to him to open; after a time it drew him to his feet and a few paces toward the window, and as it increased it drew him farther, until at last his hand was on the bar of the shutter; and he threw the shutter back and opened the window, and a black dog leapt into the room. His coat was wet, as though he had swum the river, and his head was wet, but he made no mark upon the floor. His eyes were blazing, and his tongue was lolling out of his mouth; but there was no sound of breathing nor any sign of moisture about the [illegible].

My grandfather walked back to the table, took up a pistol, and sat down. The dog ran around the room, sniffing at every vacant place, and then paused before Gavan. He took a steady sight and pulled the trigger; the lock snapped, and there the dog stood still, with his wicked eyes on my grandfather's face.

And then my father, who was watching all this from the little room, heard a clear, shrill cry, though whether Gavan uttered it he could not tell, and the black dog ran past the chair and around it, the pistol fell, and the creature was across the floor and out of the window quick as the shadow of a flying bird.

The boy broke out of his hiding-place, hot with terror. Patrick Gavan was dead, and on his right hand was a red mark in the shape of a dog's tongue.

The Isle of the Lush Bananas.

A millionaire and a beggar suffered shipwreck and both were cast upon an uninhabited island which abounded in bananas. The millionaire, whose property was all in railroads, did not lose a cent by the shipwreck, but the poor beggar saved only the shirt on his back—which, indeed, was the only shirt he had had for longer than he could remember.

When they found themselves on the shore the millionaire nodded affably to the beggar and said: "I don't remember to have seen you before, but I suppose you must have been on the steamer. Second cabin?"

"No, stowaway. It's cheaper."

"Ah, yes. I hadn't thought of that. Well, this shipwreck is something of a leveler, and we might as well be friendly and see how we can help each other until we are rescued. What can you do?"

"I? Oh, I can beg."

"I'm afraid that in the absence of inhabitants that is a useless accomplishment," replied the millionaire.

"Well, what can you do, yourself?"

"I can buy," said the millionaire.

"Umph!" said the beggar.

"A very just remark," said the millionaire. "I see that we are on the same footing and the outlook is discouraging."

"That is just where I fail to agree with you," said the beggar. "For the first time since I can remember I can live without begging. See, the island is full of bananas."

"But," said the other, "bananas don't agree with me."

"You should have bought a better digestion when your money had purchasing power. Still, if you don't like fruit, there are fish. I see them leaping in the cove there, and we can make fire with your spectacles for a burning-glass."

"But fish almost poison me. I never eat them."

"Well, you are difficult. But there is a small bird."

"I never eat them without the accompaniment of a cold bottle. Still, I suppose I could go a small bird if you caught it and cooked it."

The twain spent months on the island and the beggar grew fat while the millionaire became as thin as an ascetic.

One day, while the millionaire watched the beggar making a meal of weak fish and fried bananas he said: "I would give all my millions (if I could get at them) for your appetite."

"There have been times," said the beggar, "when I would have jumped at your offer, but as we seem out of the track of steamers I won't even consider it. And to tell the truth, I don't believe that all your millions would make these fish any more delicate to my palate nor would seven millions buy so luscious a banana in New York as this that is now slipping over my tongue. But as for you, if you could buy my appetite it would be cheap at any price, for I am happy and fat and you are starving and sad. A word of advice. Next time you begin life see to it that you get an appetite for nourishing things along with your money, for there is more food in the world than there are places where money is valuable."—Charles Battell Loomis in "Saturday Evening Post."

Mark Twain on "Gentlemen."

Commenting on Mrs. Astor's alleged statement, that "without a college education no man can be a gentleman," Mark Twain says that "perhaps Mrs. Astor, when she uses the word 'gentleman,' does not have the same meaning in view that we rude people have." He thinks she probably means "a leader of cotillions; a spick and span dandy, who knows enough to observe the ordinary rules of politeness when he is on parade, and who has a valet at home to tell him what clothes are proper to wear." Twain's idea of a gentleman is "a kindly, courteous, unselfish man, who thinks first not of himself, but of his fellow-man; not one of those 'chappies,' who are in reality the most selfish men on earth," and he adds: "Take the men of prominence in the United States to-day and pick out the true gentlemen. I'll venture that nine out of ten of them never had a high school education, let alone a college education. Why, the first gentleman I ever knew was an old California miner, who could hardly write his own name. He was a '49er, and he and his partner had struck it rich in the early days. The old man had neither chick nor child, and he had worked hard all his life, and when he did get his money he hardly knew what to do with it. He didn't try to jump into society, or to push his way with the 'big fellows' there. He continued to live with the people he had associated with all his life, and many an act of kindness was done, many a wandering son and father saved, many a sorrowing woman's burden lightened and her life brightened by an unknown donor whose identity was only known to a few. It was different with his partner. He had a wife and two daughters with social aspirations, and after a whole lot of pushing and hauling and shoving they landed in society. The expense was too much of a drain on the husband's purse, and he speculated, with the inevitable outcome. He lost his entire fortune and shot himself. Then it was the true gentlemanliness of the old man showed itself. The widow and her daughters had no one to turn to but him, and he did not disappoint them. He saved their home for them when everything else went under the hammer, and he maintained them in it in all the regal style to which they were accustomed, although he still lived in his old lodgings. He lived long enough to see both of the girls well married and the mother comfortably settled for life. Then he died in a charity hospital in San Francisco. He had spent every penny he owned on the family of his partner. That is what I call a gentleman."

Curious Bits of News.

Wearing sandals is an English fad that has just reached America. They come in several styles, and their use is said to meet with the approval of physicians and chiropodists.

When "Looking Backward" was written it was the prophecy of a dreamer that in a hundred years the citizen would hear sweet music by telephone. Already in London advertisements of fashionable flats offer you the luxury of an electrophone in each suite.

An English paper says that a great many valuable jewels were swept up after King Edward and Queen Alexandra's recent court. An equerry superintended the work and great care was taken with the valuable finds, most of which were promptly enquired for by their owners.

A peculiarly interesting ceremony has been gone through at Westminster Abbey several times. A stalwart grinning bobby sits upon an ordinary cane-seated chair, while a tin crown is put on his head to the accompaniment of thunderous peals from the great organ, and the shrill voices of the boy choir. It is one of the rehearsals preliminary to the coronation.

The English sparrow, which has made so many enemies in the East, has invaded the Rocky Mountain region. For some time past, Mr. T. D. A. Cockerell reports, it has been known in the north-eastern section of New Mexico, at Raton and Las Vegas, and it seems to be gradually spreading westward and southward, having recently been noticed, for the first time, at Albuquerque.

One of the bloodiest bull-fights ever witnessed in Juarez, Mexico, was on March 16, when Fuentes and Mazzantini, Spain's most renowned matadors, fought six bulls to the death. Five horses were horribly gored and killed or mortally wounded during the combat, which lasted three hours, and the ten thousand people who saw the Sunday afternoon battle had their thirst for gore fully satisfied.

The Russian Government has undertaken the completion of a great petroleum pipe line from the oil-wells of Baku on the Caspian Sea to the port of Batum on the Black Sea, a distance of about 550 miles, following the axis of the Caucasus range of mountains. Several years may be required to finish the work, but when the line is in operation it will be capable of transporting 625,000,000 gallons a year, and the intention is to compete in the world's markets with American petroleum.

It is difficult to account for the enormous velocity of some birds' flight when migrating. The northern blue throat goes at the rate of 540 miles an hour, flying 4,800 miles from Egypt to Heligoland in a spring night of barely nine hours. Virginian plover fly from Labrador to North Brazil, 3,600 miles, without stopping, going at the rate of 436 miles in an hour, and probably more. How can this speed be attained? "Nature Notes" thinks it is because the birds resort to great heights, where the resistance of the air is slight.

Among the most interesting experiments in telephoning without wires are those of Monsieur Ducretet, a French scientist. He places an ordinary telephonic transmitter in direct communication with the ground, and at a considerable distance away, on the other side of some buildings with thick walls and cellars, he has a receiver, connected by one wire to the earth, and by another wire to a small metallic sphere let down through an opening to the floor of the catacombs beneath Paris. When words are spoken into the transmitter they are heard in the receiver with much greater clearness than in an ordinary telephone. Monsieur Ducretet is continuing his experiments at increasing distances.

In many farming districts of the West the telephone is taking the place of the newspaper in certain directions. With the spread of the telephone to farms has come about what the company calls a "news service." At a given hour every evening—seven o'clock is the time in most communities—the central operator calls up its long line of subscribers and reads off to them, as to one man, the important happenings of the day. First the official Washington time is given, so that clocks may be regulated, and then come the weather quotations for the next twenty-four hours. Market quotations of farm commodities always follow, so the subscriber in South Dakota knows what his butter sent last week to New York, Chicago or Boston sold for that day. This one feature alone is changing the markets for certain farm products, and swinging them, for instance, from Boston to New York, and vice versa. Important news of national moment is also telephoned briefly without bias, and thus the twenty minutes devoted to this news service is filled out.

Lost the Case.

"Sometimes," said a prominent lawyer, who was giving some reminiscences of his professional career, "a case is won or lost for you right in the court-room without your lifting your finger—or rather, your voice.

"I was once counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for infringement of trade-mark. My client made a brand of chewing-gum put up in a blue wrapper. This wrapper had been widely advertised, and was a good thing to catch the eye in a candy counter. The defendant had got up a pretty close imitation; at a distance it looked the same, although the words were different, and nothing was copied except the general appearance, which is, for advertising purposes, half the value of a distinctive label.

"The opposing counsel made out a pretty good case, showing that in wording, the shape of the letters, and other points, his client's wrapper was different from the plaintiff's.

"'Why,' he said, picking up one wrapper and showing it to the jury, 'would anyone mistake this wrapper for that of the plaintiff? See,' he continued, reaching down for the other, 'they are entirely different.'

"I told him to hold the two just as he had them. He paused at my interruption, wondering what I was up to. His wonder changed to confusion when he found that he had mistaken them himself, and picked up my client's wrapper first. It took two words from one to win the case."

AN ENVIABLE RECORD
Holds First Place in the Piano World.

Here's a piano that's the cynosure of all eyes. Musical critics know it as an instrument that holds a place by itself among Canadian made pianos—and that ranks with foreign pianos of widest reputation. It is the ideal piano.

At all great functions and musical events it is the choice of the greatest artists. It is the piano that was the choice of Royalty—being used exclusively on the royal train by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York in their journey through Canada.

A Letter from the Front

Montreal, May 28.—The following letter was received from Clerksdorp, dated April 2, by Mrs. Massiah, Montreal, from her son, Trooper H. C. Massiah, of the S.A.C.:

"About two weeks ago we had a big drive, not a sleigh drive but a Boer drive. We left Vaal Banks Sunday at 7 p.m., rode all night, and next day ran into the Boers about 4 p.m., Monday, capturing their convoy, three 15-pounders and two pom-poms killed 70 and captured 26; but, as our chief object was to drive the Boers into the columns on the Clerksdorp side, we were satisfied, as the other columns got 1,000 of them.

"We camped in Haartebeestefontein valley Monday night, April 3, after being in the saddle twenty-four hours. We stayed there all day Tuesday resting our horses and only sending out small patrols. We left Wednesday morning at 5 o'clock, arriving at Vaal Banks about 3 p.m. Our troops captured nine Boers, 14 mules and 11 horses also three Cape carts. We left Thursday and got here Saturday at 10.30 a.m. This is to be our chief camp for a time. We send patrols out every day. We had another flying column out on Tuesday and Wednesday after a Boer laager near Mafeking, but when we got there they had skipped. But we ran into a Boer convoy, capturing it all, including 1,000 head of cattle 3,000 sheep and 30 prisoners. Col. Keke which is in command of us. The Cameron Highlanders joined us two days ago."

MIX-UP WITH THE BOERS.

In another letter dated April 17, Private Massiah, says:

"I have not written since we left Bloemfontein. We had a big scrap about four miles from where the C.M.R's got cut up. Von Dolley's column with 3,000 men and one gun were ahead of us when Kemp and Bothister, thinking they had an easy thing, rushed the advance, consisting of M.I.'s and Y.L.'s. The M.I.'s got mixed up with the Boers while the Y.L.'s skipped for the convoy. The Scottish Horse were driven on the guns. We were supports to the advance, and when the order came we rode up, dismounted and opened fire at 800 yards. The Boers were riding knee to knee, their lines hanging loose, their rifles resting in the hollow of the left arm, firing like blazes. They came on until they were within 75 yards, when our fire became too hot for them, and they turned and fled. The guns, which had opened up by this time, shelling them until they were out of sight. They left 30 dead on the field, including Commandant Botgister, 60 wounded and 30 prisoners. Our loss was 12 killed and 50 wounded. None were hit in the Canadian troops. We chased the Boers for 18 miles, and got their three guns, which they captured from Lord Methuen, also 15 prisoners and one pom-pom. The signal for their attack seemed to be two shots from their 15-pounders. It appears that they only saw one column, while ours, under Col. Grenfell, was behind out of sight. Both columns were under command of Col. Kekewich.

"We left Doornfontein Tuesday morning at half-past four and got in here at 2.30 p.m., a distance of 42 miles. We are going tomorrow morning to Black's Spruit, 14 miles away. The C.M.R.'s are back here again.

"I saw Harry Niven again yesterday. He had tea with George Addy and I. He is in good health and spirits.

"There is a rumour that the Canadian S. A. C.'s are going home in October. There is a peace conference going on at present. I think a few weeks will see the finish."

MAJOR MILLER'S DEATH

This poem is not original; it is copied and altered to suit the occasion by a correspondent of this great family journal:

Not a cry was heard, not a sorrowful word
As his corpse from the committee room they hurried;
For the fight was now over, and everyone said,
That the Major was deeply buried.

Gladly he entered the fight, hoping to win,
For the wily Tories deceived him;
They led him to think he should surely get in
Now the political grave received him.

He had told about school-books municipal law,
About boodling he did some squealing,
But he found to his cost that the cards did not draw,
That the Province wished none of his healing.

A few shots around, said a lovely Amen;
And the Grits were all broadly smiling,
And they looked up their sleeves, did these bad Tory men—
For now they were now through beguiling.

A Despatch to the London Papers State That War is Over

Lord Kitchener's Splendid System of Blockhouses Broke the Backs the Burghers

Still the Cape Colony Rebels to Deal With

Special to The Times.

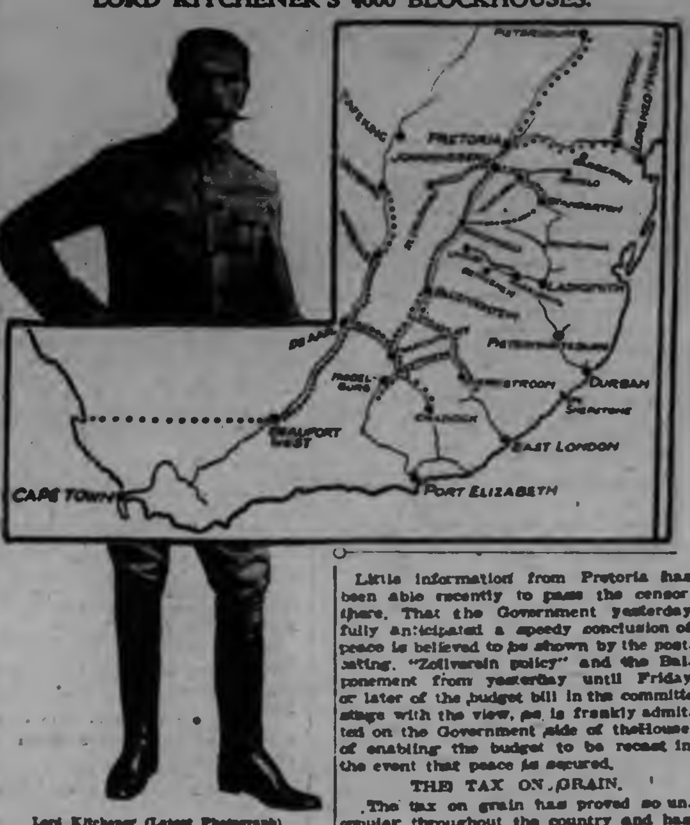
London, May 29.—The Daily Mail this morning says the Cabinet Council to be held to-day will decide upon points of detail, mostly of a financial nature, which have been raised by the Boers in the peace negotiations. Great Britain's decision in the matter will then be communicated to the Vereeniging conference by delegates at Pretoria, says the paper, and, being the best obtainable terms, they will almost certainly be accepted.

The results should be announced officially either Thursday or Friday of this week, probably on Friday, the day upon which King Edward's birth is celebrated. Peace is quite certain, says the Daily Mail and the delegates at Pretoria are only engaged in endeavoring to gild the pill for the Vereeniging conference to swallow.

The Daily Mail says further: "Our despatches from Pretoria assert that numerous communications are passing between Lords Kitchener and Milner in South Africa and London. Lord Kitchener, although he is still full of energy, is much aged in appearance as a result of the severe and continuous strain which he has undergone. The consensus of opinion is that the recent negotiations have proved Lord Kitchener to be a great diplomatist as well as a great soldier. It is difficult to appreciate the magnitude of the difficulties Lord Kitchener has had to contend with. The Boer leaders are all deeply impressed with his personality and trust him implicitly.

"It is understood that Lord Milner (the British High Commissioner in South Africa) has gracefully admitted that the ultimate credit for the accomplishment of the great task is due to Lord Kitchener."

LORD KITCHENER'S 4000 BLOCKHOUSES.



Lord Kitchener (Latest Photograph).

Just before Parliament rose after midnight last night a rumour reached the lobbies that a hitch had occurred in the peace negotiations. Nothing official concerning this rumour could be ascertained but a despatch from Pretoria, in which it was said that the prevalence throughout South Africa of the optimistic feeling in regard to the peace negotiations was hardly based upon the solid facts may be regarded as an indication that such a hitch as occurred.

Little information from Pretoria has been able recently to pass the censor there. That the Government yesterday fully anticipated a speedy conclusion of peace is believed to be shown by the postponing "Zollverein policy" and the postponement from yesterday until Friday or later of the budget bill in the committee stage with the view, as is frankly admitted on the Government side of the House, of enabling the budget to be recast in the event that peace is secured.

THE TAX ON GRAIN.

The tax on grain has proved so unpopular throughout the country and has had such an unexpected effect in reuniting the Liberal party with a most effective election cry that there is little doubt he Government will welcome an excuse to drop it. The belief that the Government intends to drop the tax on grain is so strong that all members of the House of Commons who have leanings toward protection met informally last night and sent an appeal to the Ministers to dispense with this tax.

Another strong reason for the desire to do away with this tax is in the colonies, where it is regarded as an opportunity to demand preferential treatment—a demand which will be strongly pressed at the coming conference of colonial Premiers in London, and which is likely to cause the Government considerable difficulty by emphasizing a sharply defined divergence of opinion in the Cabinet.

There the Chamberlain party is advocating, your party advocated just the reverse. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, is said to be quite willing to surrender the tax on grain.

A PREDICTION.

The Daily News predicts that once peace is secured the present Ministry will go to pieces in twelve months through the irreconcilable dissensions between the Salisbury and Chamberlain sections. In the meantime, Lord Rosebery is drawing the Liberals closer together. He has consented to preside at a Liberal meeting to be held in London to protest against the Government education bill. This bill has also proved to be an unpopular measure, so much so, that many of the Government's supporters are urging the Government to modify it.

COLONIES STAGGERED HUMANITY

Cape Town, May 28.—Prime Minister Seddon, of New Zealand, who is on a visit to South Africa, held a reception yesterday. He made a speech in which he said he felt sure that peace was not far off.

Mr. Seddon added: "When peace comes, let one and all be satisfied that it will will be a peace on an everlasting basis. The response made by the colonies during the war has staggered humanity."

Mr. Seddon went on to say that a stupendous work lay before all of them. It was essential to obtain an increased British population. Many New Zealanders were now settling in the country. Referring to the continental slanders on the British army, Mr. Seddon said that it was now proved that any insult to the flag caused pain throughout all the colonies. He advocated the "open door" for British products of the colonies and trading between the colonies.

The Hague, May 29.—It is stated in Boer circles here that the peace proposals made to the conference at Vereeniging, Transvaal, included the condition that the Boers in the field be allowed to consult with the Boer delegates in Europe before a definite settlement is reached. It is declared also upon the same authority that the British Government refused on May 22 to accede to this request.

Pretoria, May 28.—Forty-six Boers, with their waggons and cattle, surrendered at Balmoral, Transvaal, Sunday.

CANADIANS HAVE ENTERIC FEVER.

Ottawa, May 28.—Lord Minto received a cablegram from the casualty department, yesterday, announcing the continued illness of Canadians suffering from enteric fever:

The cable reads: Cape Town, May 26.—Dangerously ill, enteric fever, May 25, at Kimberley, 2nd C.M.R., Harry Wilson Dyment, C. McVicar, Ed. Keddy; at Pietermaritzburg, E. C. Redswell.

Don't be Bluffed

By the Latest and Most Discreditable Tactics of a Hopeless Opposition

UNDULY INFLUENCING ELECTORS

Attempt to Unduly Influence Electors to Refrain from Voting—The Cowardly Game of Desperate Men.

The opponents of Hon. Mr. Stratton are playing the dangerous game of maliciously publishing and circulating an utterly unfounded and baseless slander and libel to the effect that he is disqualified as a candidate at the present election, the alleged reason being that the Examiner had a contract with the Returning Officer for the printing of the ballots, and that therefore Mr. Stratton is disqualified.

There is not the slightest atom of truth in the statements made in this connection. The desperate Opposition in this town are playing a dangerous game by attempting to exercise undue and unlawful influence upon the electors to induce them to refrain from voting. This is a much greater and more serious breach of the election law than the alleged offence implied in the charge, which is without the slightest justification, even as a campaign trick.

The honest electors of West Peterborough will resent the unworthy and unwarranted tactics involved in the utterly baseless charge referred to.

Let all Mr. Stratton's supporters poll their votes early on Thursday, and roll up such a majority as will show that the unscrupulous and cowardly tactics of Mr. Stratton's opponents are justly condemned by the honest electors of West Peterborough. No elector who votes for Mr. Stratton need be afraid that his vote will be lost. It will be counted as a factor in the biggest majority that has ever been rolled up in West Peterborough. Let no elector pay any attention to eleventh hour roorbacks invented by a desperate opposition playing a losing game.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

FOR WHOM TO VOTE

To the Editor of The Times:

Dear Sir,—As one who has no very strong leanings to either particular party and who is quite prepared to admit that there are matters connected with both that are not altogether satisfactory, I wish to state why I think it is in the interest of the working men of the Town to support Mr. Stratton in this election.

In the first place, he is a life long resident of the Town, and I feel that it is a great honor to the whole community to have one of its citizens a Cabinet Minister. So far as I know Mr. Stratton is the only man who has ever risen to this position of influence in Peterboro' and supposing we were so foolish as to lose his services as our representative, there can be no question that many long years would elapse before Peterborough was again represented by a Cabinet Minister.

Then, in the second place, there is the consideration which will occur to anyone of ordinary sense who is not blinded by political feeling —the consideration I refer to is the great power Mr. Stratton possesses of influencing and fathering the up-building and general progress of the town. Every one knows that for years Mr. Stratton's best efforts have been at the service of every movements for the improvement of the general business conditions of Peterborough. His interests are wrapped up in the development and maintenance of the prosperity of the town, and no one who knows anything of the inside history of the various arrangements that have been made manufacturing and other industries, he will agree that Mr. Stratton's influence has been greatly beneficial to the storekeepers, working men and manufacturers of Peterborough.

It would be foolish to change a man of his influence and ability for a mere nonentity, who will have no power in building up the interests of the Town.

Then last but not least there is the personal consideration. Mr. Stratton is an old Peterborough boy, a life long resident of the Town, proud of its progress and proud of its achievements whether in connection with Industry or Sport every young man will tell you that Mr. Stratton's pocket has always been open to any reasonable demand for the encouragement of the latter.

But this is not all. Probably few people outside the circle of his own family know how constant are the demands upon his pocket for charitable purposes and how frequently his open-hearted generosity has lifted the weight which sudden calamity has brought, or sickness and death entailed upon the suffering. In cases like these no one has ever heard Mr. Stratton ask whether a man or a woman was a Grit or Tory, Catholic or Protestant. Their need was the only passport required to his generous assistance and if the records of such cases are ever to be known, I believe that the people of Peterborough will be astonished at their extent and widespreadness.

For every reason, I say, that a vote for Mr Stratton is a vote for the best interests of the Town, and every man, woman and child in it, and I hope that others beside myself will take this view and mark their ballots for him.

Yours truly.
THOS. V. BROWNE.

but in a flash Harold St. John had sprung between them.

"She is mine!" he cried. "Do not dare to touch her until our relative positions are settled. Let the squire and her sisters attend her. Fortunately the minister who performed the ceremony is in the city; believing she would persist in denying this marriage, I made the appointment with him to meet me here and identify her. Ah, here he is now; we will await his decision."

They all turned toward the entrance gate, and beheld a tall, thin, clerical-appearing gentleman coming up the paved walk.

St. John called to him, and he came hastily forward.

"Has there been an accident?" he queried, looking at St. John, then back to the rest of the group.

"There would have been had it not been for your timely assistance in coming here to decide a very important matter," responded St. John, grimly, and in a few words he explained to the Reverend Mr. Tice the situation — that he claimed one of these ladies as his wife, and that another one persisted in claiming him in order to mix affairs up.

"Look around on these three," he continued, "and kindly settle the matter. Select the one from among them to whom you married me on the night of the 24th of June."

The old minister looked greatly bewildered.

"You will abide by his decision, I presume?" said St. John, turning to Aleck.

"How am I to know that this is not a plot concocted between you?" cried Aleck.

But the Reverend Mr. Tice interrupted him with a grave shake of the head.

"Sir," he said, "I am a minister of the Lord. Should I lend myself to a plot? Besides," he added, eagerly, seeing the squire for the first time, "there is my old friend, Farmer Gordon; he has known me from my boyhood; he will tell you I am a man who would not lend myself to a scheme. I will speak the truth, and nothing but the truth."

Then the squire spoke.

"Not even for all the gold this man could obtain would the Reverend Mr. Tice utter that which is false," he said, hoarsely; "let him look upon Hetty's face—and upon — Daisy's, if he really persists in it, and say which one is—is—this villain's wife."

Slowly, while they were speaking, Daisy had regained consciousness, and now clung to Hetty in despair too horrible for words to describe.

Slowly the minister stepped forward and, adjusting his spectacles, eagerly scanned the three death-white faces.

At length the old minister turned to the father whose white face was buried in his hands, and to him he addressed his reply:

"I have looked upon these three young ladies, and I am firmly convinced that one of them is Harold St. John's wife—lawfully wedded to him at the time and place of which he speaks—but, to make assurance doubly sure, I would test my memory that it may serve me beyond a doubt. Let these two"—pointing to Hetty and Daisy—"stand in turn with this man before the altar in the same old church, as the couple stood whom I married that night, and then I will answer you which of these two is the one."

"Courage, darling," whispered poor Hetty, "the minister cannot decide, and when there is doubt there is hope that he can be convinced that—"

"Hush, hush," interrupted Daisy. "Listen to what Aleck is saying; in our name he agrees to the proposition. Oh, Hetty—Hetty, the sight of that old church again would drive me mad."

"But it must be, darling," responded Hetty; "we must brave it out to the last."

"But I cannot see your life wrecked for me—even to save me," sobbed Daisy, piteously; "oh, how I wish you had not stayed my hand when I wanted to take my life last night."

"Be brave, my darling," whispered Hetty, "you must stand this last and greatest ordeal."

"Are you willing to be drawn into this affair, Daisy, my love?" said Aleck, drawing her aside; "remember it is for Hetty's sake."

"You—you—would not believe it even if he should declare I was the one, Aleck," she wailed below her breath.

"Certainly not—in the face of Hetty's acknowledgment," he responded promptly, continuing: "The villain simply wants to drag you into it to annoy me and create a great scandal; why, the very idea is worthy of the brain of a fiend incarnate."

"Then must I go, Aleck?" she gasped.

"Yes," he answered hurriedly, "since the old minister so earnestly requests it. You know there is a great resemblance between Hetty and yourself, which in truth puzzles him; when he sees the right one standing before the altar with St. John he will recognize her."

CHAPTER XLIII.

Identified.

Daisy raised her terror-stricken eyes to Aleck's face.

"For your sake I will try and bear it," she said; then she buried her face in Hetty's lap, too weak for sobs, too overcome for prayer.

The squire's voice broke in upon her confused thoughts.

"Come, dear," he said, "we will make preparations for this journey at once; we will be in time for the southern express which starts in an hour from now," and they all noticed that the squire spoke no word to Hetty; he even ignored her outstretched little white hand.

"Say one kind word to me, papa!" she cried. "My—my—heart is breaking."

—Bush fires have been raging to an alarming extent in this locality, but we are glad to say no great damage has been done as rain came in the nick of time.

—The Presbyterians held their annual tea on Victoria day, and it was a decided success. Although the weather was unfavorable, the proceeds amounted to over thirty-four dollars, thanks to all, and more especially Clydesdale, for their liberal support.

—The Apsley boys are studying the 12th commandment; Remember election day and vote for Ross.

One of our young horsemen has invented a device to keep his driver from switching his tail which we understand has proved a decided success, even beyond his expectations, for it has left no tail to switch, as that member had to be amputated to save the poor brute's life. How is that for cruelty to animals!

—We understand some more of our young ladies have transgressed the law by decorating the streets in the evenings. Poor girls! you seem to be a thorn in the flesh, but don't despair —the present Government won't reign forever.

THE LIBERALS HAVE A VERY CLOSE SHAVE

The Government Claim Fifty One Seats and the Opposition Forty-Seven, With One Place to Hear From---Later Returns May Materially Alter the Situation

MR. STRATTON'S MAJORITY IS OVER A THOUSAND

The Electors of West Peterborough Stick by Their Old and Faithful Representative

His Splendid Victory Will Greatly Strengthen Him Amongst His Colleagues and in the Country—Mr. Anderson Elected

The elections are over and it looks as though the Liberals have been returned to power by a narrow majority. Below will be found complete returns with one exception. In several cases the majorities are so close that a recount may make a change. The Globe claims that Mr. Ross will have a majority of five, while the Mail and Empire concede a majority of three. Manitoulin, which is yet to hear from, will probably go Liberal, which will increase the Government's lead by one.

In West Peterborough Mr. Stratton's majority, when the returns are all in, will probably exceed 1 000, which must be very gratifying to his many friends, Liberal and Conservative alike. This is an effectual reply to the unfair efforts that were made to defeat him, and will, we trust, forever put an end to that style of campaigning.

MR. ROSS SAYS IT IS SEVEN

Mr. Stratton received a telephone despatch late last night from Hon. Mr. Ross, who stated that the Liberals have a majority of seven. With the bye-elections which are to take place, this majority will probably be increased to ten or twelve.

In East Peterborough, Mr. Wm. Anderson has also won a great victory. We were unable to secure returns, but the majority will exceed 300. This riding was regarded by the Liberals as an exceedingly doubtful one for them, and was so marked. That the majority is so large is a surprise to both parties.

The following is the returns as far as heard from, up to the hour of going to press:

EAST PETERBOROUGH

It was found impossible to secure full returns from East Peterborough last night, but Mr. Anderson's majority at present exceeds 300, and his election is assured, allowing for all possible contingencies. Complete returns from this riding will be published tomorrow.

WEATHER NOTES

Friday—Fine and warm.

Fine weather now prevails over the greater part of Canada, with decided warm conditions in the Northwest. Fine warmer weather is now indicated for Ontario and Quebec, the rise in temperature to be especially marked after Thursday.

MOUNT PELEE AGAIN IN FIERCE ERUPTION

Another Violent Outburst Terrifies the Inhabitants

VILLAGES ARE IN DANGER

Terrific Lightning Flashes Accompany the Magnificent Volcanic Disylay

The Refugees Fly as far as Possible From the Scene of the Disaster—Ashes Carried to Dominica

Fort de France, Martinique, May 29.—At 8.40 o'clock last night vivid flashes of lightning illuminated the sky, frightening the people, who thought the lightning portended another disastrous eruption of Mont Pelee. Many of them hastily left the city.

A majority of the people crowded into the streets and gazed with awe and fear at the peculiar flashes, which stretched across the heavens for an exceedingly long distance. The display lasted for nearly two hours. Then it subsided and the people returned to their homes, where they remained disquieted throughout the night.

It rained here all day yesterday, and the lightning last night was due to the natural atmospheric conditions, but of this the people would not or could not convince themselves. As a matter of fact worse displays of lightning have been seen here, but now the slightest disturbance terrifies the people.

Mont Pelee was in eruption about the time the lightning was seen, but it had no connection with the phenomenon referred to. The mountain threw out great quantities of volcanic matter, and the northern towns were covered with ashes.

Six houses were destroyed at Basse Point, but no deaths have been reported. The inhabitants of Marigot, Grand Anse, Macoube, St. Jacque and Ajoupa Bouillon are in a state of terror.

Prof. Robt. T. Hill, the American geologist, is said to have advised the evacuation of these towns, and recommends the town of Trinite as the site for a new city.

Ten thousand persons are deserting the northern part of the island and coming to Fort de France, which is already overcrowded with refugees.

Reports this evening state that Pelee continues to emit ashes and molten matter, which are covering the mountain.

Acting Governor L'Heurre has sailed on the French warship Tage to make a tour of the island.

Prof. Hill has gone on an expedition and will try to reach the peak of Mont Pelee.

Mr. Kennan and M. Jaccaci left for the interior of the island last Thursday. No news has since been received of their whereabouts, and there is considerable anxiety regarding their safety.

Roseau, Dominica, May 29. — There was a shower of volcanic ashes here all last night. The ashes came down in greater quantity than at any time since the eruption of Mont Pelee.

Paris, May 29.—The following telegram has been received from Fort de France:

"An alarming eruption occurred last evening. The flames for an hour were 150 metres high and of the diameter of the crater, 300 metres. Thousands of lightning flashes were seen. The electrical disturbances were very terrifying, though they were localized around the volcano. The factories are threatened and a panic prevails."

A despatch to the Matin from Fort de France, dated Tuesday, says that a new eruption of immense violence has caused a great panic. The crater of Mont Pelee flung a heavy rain of cinders and gravel over the northern districts to Lorrain. There were thick clouds charged with electricity hovering over the mountain. No serious accident has been reported.

A cable received at Brest announces that the cable north of Martinique has been repaired and the usual communication by way of Hayti has been restored. The Governor of Martinique is moving the refugees rapidly, fearing an outbreak of fever.

BOER ACTIVITY IN CAPE COLONY

A Score of Roving Bands which the British Are Not Doing Much Just at Present to Suppress

London, May 30.—The capture of Commandant Malan, announced from Middelburg, Cape Colony, last night, demonstrates the activity of the rebellion in Cape Colony. Commandant Malan took the late Commandant Scheeper's command when the latter was captured by the British, and became chief Boer commandant in Cape Colony after Commandant Kritzinger's capture. Malan (who was mortally wounded when captured, on the Rypon road, May 27, by Major Collett's mounted troops) was among the irreconcilables who refused to send delegates to the peace conference at Vereeniging, Transvaal.

According to the latest uncensored correspondence from Cape Town, the Boers are still in constant occupation of at least 22 different localities in Cape Colony, having more than a score of bands of raiders, mounted and armed, and of sufficient mobility to deny successful pursuit, although the British have often swept and "cleared" every mile of the colony's territory. A correspondent reports that "invasion is more actively aggressive than ever, and rebellion is more rampant."

The campaign against the roving Boer commands in Cape Colony, which has been in active progress for sixteen months, has achieved nothing beyond keeping them moving. "Any occasional success," the correspondent adds, "obtained by the seventeen British columns now operating in Cape Colony is more the result of luck than of their tactics, and these unpalatable facts will continue so long as so few columns co-operate in the hustling. The inadequacy of the supply of troops is at the root of the unsatisfactory operations."

ROWED AWAY FROM THE BURNING VOLCANO

Escape of Count Fitz James And Baron Fohtenilliat

INCIDENTS AT ST. PIERRE

Instantaneous Death of the Population—Glass and Silver Fused That in Moment and Wood Not Charred

New York, May 30.—Passengers arriving here from Martinique bring some details of the Mont Pelee eruption which were not included in the cable reports. Among those who came of the Red D Line steamship Caracas which got in yesterday were the Comte Fitz-James, Baron Fontenilliat and T. Max Smith of this city.

The Comte Fitz-James said that he had been stopping at St. Pierre, on his way here from French Guiana and that he was waiting for a ship to bring him on northward. On the day of the eruption, he said, he and the Baron de Fontenilliat went out fishing in a small boat and were about two miles off shore when the eruption came.

From the top of the cone, he said, there was a burst of white smoke similar to that at the explosion of a cannon's charge, and this was immediately follow. by a rapidly outspreading pall of heavy black smoke, overlying a dense yellowish cloud, which settled rapidly over St. Pierre. Almost immediately the air became exceedingly hot and stifling, and soon ashes began to fall. The spreading cloud of black was impenetrable to the eye and presently it brought a considerable degree of darkness. The town was obscured completely, buried in the black mist.

Then the black cloud gradually rose, and as it was dissipated the yellow mist melted to the atmosphere also, and as it vanished there leaped into the air the flames of St. Pierre burning. The fire burned for four or five hours and St. Pierre was no more.

The Count said that it was quite impossible to impart the impression the awful spectacle made upon a witness of it.

"To see ships in the air," said he, "was to be stunned at the forces playing before one's eyes. I happened to be looking directly at the cable ship Grappler when the turmoil reached the water, and I saw her raised clear of the water, I should say fifteen feet, and then come down and sink instantly."

It became so unbearably hot even where the Count and his companion were, that they had to pull away as hard as they could. They landed some distance to the southward, as soon as they believed they had reached a safe place, and made their way afoot to Fort de France.

The next day they went back to the ruined town. The Count brought with him here a claret glass, fused, twisted and flattened, with a suggestion of the iridescence that is found on some buried glasses. He took it from a shop in St. Pierre, where it had been with others on one of a set of wooden shelves. The shelves had fallen in the collapse of the building's walls, and while the wood was not burned in the least, the glassware was all half fused.

Nearby on the floor a little girl had been playing with her dolls, and there was a small toilet set among her toys. Every piece of crockery in the toilet set was fused, as was the claret glass, but the corpse of the child was not burned.

The Count also brought with him three five-franc pieces, much the size of our silver dollars, which had been literally boiling, as the bubbles on them showed; yet they were not melted and the lettering on them was not even effaced.

These things and others similar furnished clear evidence of the tremendous and momentary intensity of the heat. The destruction of St. Pierre's population was instantaneous, according to these indications.

The Count said that St. Pierre would never be rebuilt. It needed only one look to show anybody that never again would a town rise there. It was the very destruction of destruction, he said,—destruction so complete that it seemed original and eternal desolation.

He added that there was no destruction outside of the lines running from the top of Pelee down to Precheur, north of St. Pierre, and to Carbet, south of it. The fall of ashes had not ruined vegetation elsewhere; the ash covering of roofs and ground was no worse than the thick dust which covers everything in Arizona after a dust storm, or in Algiers after the sirocco.

Mr. Smith went to St. Pierre on the Korona, which got here week before last with her stories of the eruption. He says of the appearance of the stream that came down from the volcano.

"I saw what looked like a great glacier flowing slowly but steadily down the side of the mountain into the sea. It was more nearly white than gray, and where it ran into the water the steam ascended in clouds. I don't know whether it was lava or mud. There was no sign of lava that we could see in the ruins of St. Pierre."

EDITORIAL NOTES

There was no Blizzard in East Peterborough yesterday, although the politicians raised the wind.

• • • •

Major Miller has nothing to be ashamed of. He put up a good fight, but the fates were against him.

• • • •

The Times' forecast of the result throughout the country is always right, if you notice.

• • • •

There is no truth in the rumour that Mr. Stratton has moved to Ennismore.

• • • •

This a great country. Over 200,000 Canadians made their mark yesterday.

• • • •

Miller, Stratton and Victory, but the greatest of these is Stratton.

• • • •

God help the country if the people are as bad as the party press would have us believe.

• • • •

Let's all take a rest.

• • • •

And now for the bye-elections.

• • • •

Who is that man Miller, anyway?

Now, gentlemen, pay your bets like men.

• • • •

The Times has no hesitation in saying the country is safe.

• • • •

Whitney was Waterloo—in fact won two Waterloos the same day.

• • • •

There is more than one prophet without honor in his own country just now.

• • • •

• • • •

What office do you want?

• • • •

Some politicians we could name should be compelled to keep peas in their boots for several moons, if they ever intend to atone for their misdeeds during the past few weeks.

• • • •

The Globe says the independent press was with the people in the recent campaign. Right your are, dear boy. This great family journal is with the people every time, for you will find it in every home in Peterborough and Ashburnham.

• • • •

And now Duncan Bole will be relegated to the rear for another four years.

• • • •

Duncan is not the Bole that cheers, as far as Mr. Ross is concerned.

• • • •

The Times' lime light exhibition on the market square last night was a peach. This g.f.j. never does things by half.

• • • •

How about that "bold bluff?"

• • • •

Had the election made you rich?

• • • •

Blessed is the man who expecteth not a government office till he gets it, then he won't be disappointed.

THREW BOY INTO RIVER

A Serious Charge Against Joseph Deschatelets, of Little Ripon

Ottawa, May 29.—Joseph Deschatelets of Little Ripon, near Papineauville, Ottawa county, is in the Hull jail awaiting trial for the alleged murder of Benjamin Riche, a fifteen year old boy. It is alleged that the prisoner threw the boy into the Little Nation River last Friday. According to the story of employees of the Papineau Lumber Company, Deschatelets and the boy were assisting in breaking a jam of logs when the prisoner seized him, and after a struggle forced him into the rapids. The body has not yet been recovered. The motive is said to be jealousy. Sheriff Wright and Detective McCaskill have gone to Ripon to investigate the affair. The prisoner was brought before the magistrate at Hull yesterday, and remanded. The boy was an adopted son of the prisoner. The latter refuses to talk.

Items of News

London May 30.—The Daily News thinks there is no truth in the report that Sir Henry Howard, British Minister at the Hague, will be appointed to succeed Lord Pauncefote as Ambassador at Washington. It bases its belief on the fact that Sir Henry's wife is an American, she being a daughter of the late George W. Riggs of Washington.

Pottsville, Pa., May 29.— The coal companies in this section are gathering special policemen to protect their property, in the event of a conflict on Monday. It is known that a strike of the pumpmen, engineers, and firemen is inevitable.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has notified coal shippers that on and after June 1, $1 a day demurrage will be charged upon cars detained over an avergae of four days. This will seriously affect speculators, who profiting by the anthracite strike and the increased demand for bituminous coal, are buying the latter, and using the cars for storage, pending a market at higher prices.

Pekin, May 29.—The native newspapers published here assert that France has notified China that the insurrection in Kwangsi Province is interfering with her Tonquin trade, and that unless it is suppressed before July, France will take steps to protect her interests.

London, May 30.—In Australia, the adult suffrage bill has passed the Senate without one dissenting vote. This means that at the next national elections all the women in Australia will be able to vote for members of both Houses of the Federal Parliament.

While Belgium has been having riots and bloodshed over the effort to establish the principle of "one man, one vote" and finally failed to secure it, Australia quietly goes ahead and gives a vote in national elections not only to every qualified man, but to every qualified woman as well.

Women have had school and municipal suffrage for many years throughout all the six Australian colonies. In 1893 South Australia gave them Parliamentary suffrage (i.e. the right to vote for members of the local Parliament of that colony), and in 1900 West Australia did the same. Now that women are to have national suffrage throughout Australia, it is expected that they will soon be given the right to vote for the local Parliaments in the four colonies where they are still excluded from this privilege. In these four — Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania and New South Wales—the position of women is now as anomalous as it would be in this country if women could vote for members of Congress, but not for members of the State Legislature.

Rome, May 29.—Leo XIII's letter to Cardinal Gibbons on the Pope's conduct in regard to the United States is the keystone of the Papal American policy. At the time of Prince Henry of Prussia's too pompous and yet fruitless journey, I pointed out clearly the continuity of the Roman policy. Leo XIII, first, alone for a long time, before the flatteries of Germany, the advances of England and the literary and commercial pilgrimages of France to Washington, foresaw the expansion of the starry flag, co-operated with the United States, and placed his forces and his valuable aid in the service of unification. The Pope has not wearied of his watchful and helpful constancy. In vain did rivalry and dissension within the bosom of the Church itself picture the downfall of his plans—Leo XIII, remained unmoved.

To-day's letter continues his mission and brings out prominently the permanent bond. "If at the very beginning of our supreme pontificate," he says, "we were moved with great joy in looking at the situation of your country, now, having held this office for more than twenty-four years, we must admit that at no moment has that early joy been diminished, but that, on the contrary, it has grown more and more from day to day, in proportion as the progress of the Catholic faith among your people became more marked. This must be attributed in the first place to the will of God, but it is also due to your zeal and to your exertions. We must, in fact, congratulate your wisdom in that, knowing well the character of the nation, you have been able to promote prudently all kinds of Catholic institutions in accordance with the minds and the peculiarities of the people."

There is contained a placid page of history, and at the same time an inestimable tribute. We are far from the days when narrow minds and misled Continentals tried to create a sort of conflict between Rome and America. "Americanism!" they said, "there is the danger. Americanism, that is the new mask of schism and of heresy." Americanism was naturalism, rationalism, the sum total of all bad isms. The second letter explains and throws light on the first to Cardinal Gibbons: "A long experience," the Pope goes on to say, "obliges us to admit that, thanks to your efforts, we have found among your compatriots docile minds and ardent souls, showing that they were ready to meet our desires. So, while almost all other nations which for many successive centuries have professed the Catholic religion have undergone painful evolutions and vicissitudes, the state of your church is, on the contrary, possessing, so to speak, blooming youth, delights our minds and fills them with joy. It is true, the civil government grants us no legal favors, but the heads of the Republic undoubtedly deserve the praise that they refuse us no just liberty."

In this letter we have the confirmation of the spirit that made Leo XIII, dictate his first letter on Americanism. At the beginning, in the middle and at the end of the document the Holy Father had taken conspicuous care in distinguishing between the true American Americanism and the false continental "Americanism" grafted on abstractions and on borrowed ideas that had become caricatures. While passions were inflamed The Pope made the distinction and showed the inevitable differences.

Ever since that episode Leo XIII, has steadily laid weight on the interpretation that was misunderstood at first. To-day's letter is the last link in the golden chain; its originality as a religious act emphasizes its importance, for is not this letter the only one that Leo XIII, has written in reply to the congratulations for his jubilee?

This is an adroit preface for the negotiations which will be undertaken with the Holy See by President Roosevelt's Philippines Commission when it stops over at the Vatican a few days from now. It emphasizes the spirit of the relations, and their glad co-operations. Mr. Taft, Mgr. O'Gorman, Mr. Smith and the Secretary of the Mission will be received at Rome as the envoys of Napoleon and of Bismarck were received in former days. At the moment when dynasties and governments are courting the United States, the United States call upon the Vatican. That is only right. The first assistant was the Pope. His is the honor of having before crossed the Atlantic.

The Italian Senate has given us a show, the furious fight between Gen. Pelloux, the late Minister, and Signor Giolitti, who is now in power. The leader of the opposition reproached the Cabinet with destroying the monarchy by its alliance with the Republicans and Socialists, just as earlier the radicals accused the conservatives of endangering institutions by their spirit of reaction. The Chamber accorded the Minister a majority of only five votes. That isn't much. But the importance of the incident is in the dilemma in which the House of Savoy is placed. If it relies on the Right it risks being overthrown; if it leans upon the Left it hastens toward suicide. It is a strange fate.

The Court of Appeal gave judgment today at Osgoode Hall confirming the conviction of Fred Lee Rice, the Aurora bank robber for the murder of County Constable William Boyd in an attempt to escape from custody with his companions, Jones and Rutledge, now dead, while being conveyed in a cab from the City Hall, on the second day of the robbery trial, Tuesday, June 4 of last year, to the jail.

The affair took place at the corner of Gerrard and Sumach streets, and created a great sensation at the time. Jones died of his wounds, and Rutledge committed suicide.

The court was unanimously of the opinion that there has been no mistrial before Chief Justice Falconbridge and a jury and the appeal of the prisoner was accordingly dismissed. Chief Justice Armour and Mr. Justice Osler read written judgments and Mr. Justice Maclennan, Mr. Justice Moss, and Mr. Justice Garrow, made verbal assent to the finding of their colleagues.

The chief's judgment was, in part, as follows:

> I am of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the verdict as found by the jury; that the direction of the learned chief justice to the jury on the question of conspiracy or common design was not one of which the prisoner could complain, that the verdict was a proper one, and that there was no mistrial.
> The evidence showed that immediately upon the parcel containing the revolvers being thrown into the cab, the prisoner, and Rutledge, at all events, and perhaps Jones, armed themselves with these revolvers and formed the common intention, by the use thereof, of promoting the unlawful purpose of escaping from lawful custody, and of assisting each other therein, and that the shooting by one of them of Boyd was an offence committed by one of them in the prosecution of such common purpose and that the commission thereof was, or ought to have been, known to be a probable consequence of the prosecution of such common purpose. Each of them was, therefore, a party to such offence, and the offence being murder in the actual perpetrator thereof, was murder in the prisoner, even if he were not the actual perpetrator thereof, and he was properly found guilty by the jury of that offence, the evidence, in my opinion, fully warranting the verdict.

Mr. T. C. Robinette, who appeared for the prisoner, stated that he would take the case to the Supreme Court. Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright pointed out that, according to the Criminal Code, there was no appeal when the judges of the Court of Appeal were unanimous.

Rice will be sentenced to death by Chief Justice Falconbridge at the City Hall on Monday at 10.30 o'clock.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD
Holds First Place in the Piano World.

Here's a piano that's the cynosure of all eyes. Musical critics know it as an instrument that holds a place by itself among Canadian made pianos—and that ranks with foreign pianos of widest reputation. It is the ideal piano.

At all great functions and musical events it is the choice of the greatest artists. It is the piano that was the choice of Royalty—being used exclusively on the royal train by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York in their journey through Canada.

Catching Fugitive Hats.

On a recent windy Sunday a new and apparently profitable industry was disclosed in up-town New York. It was a day when hats went suddenly off the head and traveled a block or two before they alighted, and then rolled or bounded three or four blocks more, like low-driven golf balls. People at Broadway and Forty-second street, says the "Tribune," had just watched a young fellow disappear down the cross street in pursuit of his Derby, and were turning to go on their ways, when a negro rounded the corner, who looked like a hat-rack. Derbies were tucked under each arm; he held a muddy tall hat in one hand and a white felt crush hat in the other, and on top of his own Derby a black felt hat was jammed securely. He wore a smile from ear to ear.

"What are you doing with all those hats?" someone asked him.

"Well, I's takin' all dat am a-comin' ma way," and he grinned. "I could 'a' got more, but I ain't got no more place to put um."

"Why don't you give them back to the men who lost them?" he was asked.

"Well, you see," said he, "they was most gen'rally so fah away dat I couldn't wait."

Then he went on up Broadway, with all his hats.

"He proves the old saying," was remarked; "never chase your own hat—someone is always ready to do it for you."

Madame—You used to say you would take your life for me, and now you are afraid to discharge the cook. Mister—It isn't death I fear; it's annihilation.

After some time a number of passengers got out, and the old gentleman sank into the nearest corner with a weary sigh.

"I wouldn't get up again," he murmured, "for an angel," and then, as he caught the eyes of the girl fixed upon him reproachfully, he added quickly, "I mean, madam, for another angel!"—Harper's Magazine.

Cecil Rhodes.

Great a figure as Cecil Rhodes was in the public eye, it may be doubted whether many people have a clear idea as to the steps by which his career was built up. That he went to South Africa for his health and returned to England to take his Oxford degree; that he made a great fortune—though smaller than that of some American multi-millionaires—out of diamonds, in part by means of an amalgamation of interests; that he "acquired" Rhodesia, became Premier of Cape Colony, came to his political downfall through the Jameson Raid, and was shut up in Kimberley; these are the main facts of his career which are well known. But main facts do not invariably supply the key to the motives and purposes of a man's life, and the ideas which filled Cecil Rhodes' mind and governed his actions have had a profound influence upon the development of a country in which we in Canada have within the past three years been forced to take a deep interest.

The question of motive may be glanced at first. The extended biography which The Times published notes the remarkably successful start which Mr. Rhodes made in South Africa, when, strat'ing as a lad of eighteen he in a year or two became a rich man. The Times says:—

"His interest in the country in which he had enjoyed two years of such strangely fortunate experience was by this time keenly stirred, and before returning to Oxford he made a journey into the north, which is of interest as having first suggested to him the great capabilities for British development of the country lying to the north of the Orange and Vaal Rivers. His trip took him as far north as Mafeking; thence to Pretoria, Murchison, Middleburg and back through the Transvaal to Kimberley. It was made in an ox waggon, at a time when the country was little known, and there were no means of communication. It occupied eight months. The rate of progression of an ox waggon is not more than from fifteen to twenty miles a day. The trip represented a walking tour of eight months through the wide-spreading solitudes of rolling veldt which filled those regions of central Africa.

"In 1872 the Boers had only been established some twenty years in the Transvaal. They were a purely pastoral, hunting, and fighting people, with a strong religious strain, deserving of respect for the sturdy independence and devotion to their own ideals which characterized them, but rude in their customs and primitive almost to the point of barbarism in their habits of life and thought. They were very frugal, very poor, without the conception of a possible development for their country than that represented by the increase of flocks and herds upon the land. Living generally in isolation upon the vast extents of grazing ground best suited to the multiplication of this form of wealth, they were wholly lacking in the intellectual stimulus which results from the interchange of opinion in the urban centres of population. Their political organization was of the simplest, amounting to little more than a patriarchal form of despotism, tempered by the individual liberty almost necessarily enjoyed during the greater part of his existence by the hunter and the herdsman on the plains. Each father of a family made for himself the laws of daily life. The rifle and the stock-whip hung side by side above every hearth. The one serious danger by which the State was threatened came from unnumbered hordes of hostile natives, who hung upon the uncertain limits of white occupation, with perpetual menace of massacre and desolation. The only bonds which drew the scattered homesteads into community were bonds of common faith and self-defence. Political unity could hardly be said to exist among a people who were unwilling to submit to taxation for common purposes. There is no reason for surprise if to a young Englishman already conversant with the methods of a developed civilization the Transvaal of that day presented the aspect rather of a rough new settlement in flux than of any fixed political organization having claim to the dignity of a nation.

"Mr. Rhodes' acquaintance with the agricultural possibilities of the South African soil in Natal, and the practical demonstration that he had received of its mineral wealth at Kimberley, combined with his personal experience of the hygienic properties of the climate to render him more appreciative than the ordinary lad of nineteen of the value of the apparently limitless area suitable to white settlement, of which his solitary trip took him over a small portion. Two years spent far from home produced on him an effect not unknown to travellers of a riper age. The latent patriotism which we all believe ourselves to share with our fellow-taxpayers had grown into a conscious sentiment. England had become a thing to love. During that eight months' silent tramp across the veldt the foundation appears to have been laid of the policy to which Mr. Rhodes' career was afterwards devoted. He has described in intimate conversation the persistence with which the thought accompanied him day by day, that the fine country through which he moved should in the future be thronged with a British population, and that no power but Great Britain should be allowed to dominate in South Africa. He saw enough to convince him of the great value of the unclaimed northern territory, and made up his mind that it must be British. Asked once in later life whether he had at that time conceived any definite scheme for bringing the country under British influence, he answered honestly in the negative. 'No,' he said, 'I only just felt each day as I looked down at the earth and up at the sky that it ought to belong to England.'"

Once upon a time Mayor Low was travelling through Germany with a party of friends. Being an excellent German linguist, he was the spokesman for the company. Upon one occasion he and his friends visited a beer garden, and after seating themselves, preparatory to having some refreshments, the pleasant duty of ordering the same fell upon Mr. Low, as usual. For once, however, he hesitated, his memory seeming to desert him. Finally after vain attempts to recall the missing word, he turned to his waiting friends, appealingly, saying:

"You will have to help me out, for I cannot for the life of me remember the German word for beer."—New York Times.

The Scientific Crook.

WE seem threatened with a new variety of crook—the scientific. According to very circumstantial reports from Washington, the experts of the Treasury Department have been experimenting with a new chemical compound said to rob steel of its temper, and hence making safe-cracking easy. This compound, called thermite, is reputed to possess marvelous virtues. When mixed with magnesium powder it will destroy the hardness of a metal, enabling a burglar to cut through the best steel as if it were lead. A five-eighths-of-an-inch tempered steel plate was so pierced. The newspaper accounts do not fail to say quaky things of how cracksmen have already put these discoveries to practical use. Owners of strong-boxes are advised not to sleep too well o' nights. All this is very interesting if it happens to be true. The profession, it may be observed, has never been slow to make improvements. It was a great day for the grafter fraternity when dynamite came to town. They took up with it at once. Popular fancy endows the knock-out fiend with a large knowledge of chemistry. There is hardly any branch of Deviousness that has not participated in the unparalleled advances of the times. And much may be looked for. Sir James Crichton Browne spoke not long ago, in England, on the improvements of the poisoners' art. He pointed out the immense possibilities that lie in cultures of deadly bacteria, to say nothing of some of the recent chemical preparations. The real art, he contended, is not simply in defying detection, but in not arousing suspicion. All the famous poisoners of the Middle Ages were, in his view, a clumsy lot. It was the same old story always—arsenic, arsenic, arsenic. The tales of the magical potions of those days were fables. The Borgias would gurgle with delight before the resources of the present day. The picture drawn by the eminent English physician was not so very reassuring to them as actively cultivate the luxury of enemies, but it is safe to say that whatever be the possibilities, they will never be realized to any great extent. The fact is that any man on vengeance bound who started in to perfect himself in this line would get so interested in his experiments that he would forget all about his plot. That is one of the beauties of modern science.

Some Roycroft Humor.

THERE is a story, writes Elbert Hubbard, that bears upon its features the mellow tinge of time, to the effect that Ralph Waldo Emerson once got up in the middle of the night and, in the course of his gropings, fell over a chair or two and knocked down the family what-not. Mrs. Emerson felt softly for her mate, and finding that he was not there guessed the source of the confusion, and called in alarm, "Waldo, Waldo! are you ill?" And the placid answer was, "No, my dear: only an idea."

So that is the story, but the new version runs this way: Mr. Emerson got up in the middle of the night, and, after falling over the family rocking-chair and knocking a plaster of paris cast off the mantel, was accosted by his good wife thus: "Are you ill, Waldo?" And there was no answer—save the scratching of matches on wall, floor, bureau and chairs. This was in the day when matches came in sticks, and you broke them off.

The lady heard the matches split off, and then she heard the scrape and scratch. "Are you ill, Waldo?" again she called in alarm. "Ill! Ill nothing—why don't you say sick?—there is no one listening. No, I am not ill. I have an idea, and wanted to write it down, but these confounded cheap matches you bought of that Connecticut peddler will not light—plague take everything that comes from Connecticut, say I!" Then there was a final scratch on the wall, and philosophy came to Mr. Compensation's rescue, as he said, "Well, well, it wasn't much of an idea, anyway; besides that, I've really forgotten what it was." And he crawled back into bed. In the morning Mrs. Emerson discovered that every tooth had been broken out of her high-back comb.

Cosmopolitan New York.

The new Cathedral of St. John in New York will, in addition to its main hall, have seven "Chapels of Tongues" where German, Spanish, French, Swedish, Italian, Armenian and Chinese services will be held each Sunday. Nevertheless, by the time the great cathedral is finished it is not unlikely that the crypt and transepts and anterooms will be required for other nationalities. A clergyman called upon Bishop Potter the other day to ask that some provision might be made for religious services for some Mesopotamian immigrants.

"Really," replied the bishop, "cannot a handful of Mesopotamians be provided for in connection with your Armenian congregation?"

The young clergyman of the tenements smiled. "I do not know what you call a handful, sir. There are some eight hundred families of Mesopotamians within ten minutes' walk of where we are sitting this moment; and as for their attendance upon Armenian services, the languages have about as little in common as Greek and Choctaw."

The "Parthians and Medes and Elamites" are, perhaps, yet to come; but the most of the other nationalities mentioned as present in Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after the crucifixion are already represented in New York, and the problem now is the same as it was then.

Couldn't Figure It Up.

"Were there any trillionaires in ancient Rome?" we asked of the astute antiquarian.

"I think not," he replied. "You see, with the Roman system of numerals it would have required a carload of chalk and a blackboard as long as from here to Halifax to enable a man to figure up the interest on a million denarii at eight per cent. for one year, six months and twenty days, and by the time he had summed it up and secured a telescope to see the beginning of his figures the borrower would have died of old age."—"Judge."

In a Chariot of Fire.

"'Morning, 'Lije. Didn't expect to see you here. Thought ye'd be givin' us fellows a pretty wide berth. When 're ye goin' to start out on the missionary business?" It was the bantering voice of Jerry Pull, the presiding genius of the Mansion House bar-room.

"Go on, Jerry, what are you giving us?" said the strapping six-footer, who had just come in from the stable yard with a pair of beautifully matched bull-terriers at his heels.

"Goin' to sell yer sportin' dogs an' give the mon' to the poor?" continued the bar-keep, throwing a wink at a select party of habitues seated near the window.

"Sell Blinker and Beefer?—not while I have the price of a drink in my clothes, Jerry," replied Elijah Todhunter, stooping and patting both his dogs affectionately. "And seeing as this has been a pretty fair season—yes, sir, pretty fair—in the horse business, I don't reckon on reaching my last nickel for a few days yet. But, say, Jerry, what's the meaning of this 'slack' they're all giving me, anyway?"

"Slack?" said Jerry. "Why, old fellow, it's reported you got religion last night. Haven't you been attendin' all these revival meetin's? The boys say you've been there four nights hand-runnin'—they seen you goin' in."

'Lije turned with an exclamation of disgust and denial—just one sharp, summarizing expletive. Then he cracked a fifty-cent piece on the top of the pine bar with enough force to mark the soft wood with an impress of the milled edge.

"Step up, boys," he said, with a wave to the arm-chair philosophers; "the drinks are on me this time."

But Elijah Todhunter, the horse-buyer and all-round sporting man, took a lemon soda while his friends disposed of sterner stuff. Then, without offering a word of explanation of the reports on which the jovial servant of Bacchus had based his jests, Elijah turned the conversation to other matters—the price of horseflesh, the records of Blinker and Beefer as prize-winners at the bench shows, "Bud" Burnside's homing pigeons, Job Enfield's new silo, and a score of other subjects of current comment in the village and township.

Having talked and listened with equal intelligence, till there seemed to be nothing more to talk about, the horse-buyer asked Jerry Pull for the latest Toronto paper, and, pulling a chair up to the fire, sat down and busied himself with his pipe and the last night's news.

Not for a dozen years had slow and sleepy Duncanville been so disturbed as by the union revival services now going on in the dingy old agricultural hall—the largest assembly room in the place. The Rev. Winterburn Packard, professional evangelist, had fairly kicked the town into a consciousness of sin. Duncanville was not in the ordinary sense a bad town—just a common country village, with six stores besides the post-office, a bank, a woollen mill, two taverns, a blacksmith and wagon-shop, an annual fair, a railway, and a market. Its people were much the same as people in most other country-places—somewhat superficial and conventional in their standards of conduct, addicted just a trifle to gossip and uncharitable speaking, possibly too prone to measure merit by success, yet on the whole a kindly disposed, right-intentioned, temperate, clean-living and honest people.

But since the advent of the Rev. Winterburn Packard, Duncanville had seemed, in the eyes of many of its own best citizens, to be a very stronghold of sin and uncleanness. It was as though the town had been rocked from its nethermost foundations by an earthquake shock. No gaping fissures had as yet appeared in the thin earth-rind on which Duncanville, in common with other human habitations, stands suspended o'er bottomless lakes of fire. But the very smell of brimstone was in the air, and it would have occasioned no surprise to the local saints had the solid earth dissolved at any moment and precipitated the whole of sinful creation into the pit of everlasting torment. Revivalist Packard had figuratively taken Duncanville by the scruff of the neck and dangled it over the bad place till its garb of mere respectability was singed on its quivering body and it yelled for mercy. Everybody was taking the shortest cut to the penitent bench with the least delay practicable. Steady church-goers, self-confessed worldlings, even the few open scoffers of the village—both sexes and all ranks and conditions of people—"old men and babes and loving friends and youths and maidens gay"—were being nightly gathered into the fold. Not since the postmaster's son had eloped with old Dr. Rubbleby's young wife and burglars had blown the safe at the railway station, both in the same night, had Duncanville experienced such a spasm of excitement.

Now, to be quite fair, the instrument by whom such miracles were wrought upon a blind and faithless generation was a man of no mean stature, morally or intellectually. But as he stood above the average in character and brain power, so the psychic side of his nature seemed to have been endowed at the expense of the physical. The Rev. Winterburn Packard was not ten years out of the divinity school. But though still in the bloom and promise of the thirties, he looked to have spent ages in fighting the hosts of Satan. He was a rather short, spare man in immaculate black clothes, that always looked as though he had just had them carefully pressed without troubling to remove them from his person; and it seemed as if the oft-repeated ironings had, in the long course of years, flattened his body till, looked at sideways, it resembled the lath and canvas trees that are used on the stage. His complexion was that of an underdone tea-biscuit. His eyes, small and piercing black, were imprisoned behind a pair of large, unrimmed, close-fitting spectacles, as if to prevent their jumping out of his head in moments of rhetorical and emotional abandon. His hair, once dark—lang syne, in the forgotten days of his youth—was now well streaked with gray, and clung in a shaggy mass at the nape of the neck by way of counterbalance to the beetling brow that seemed to threaten to disturb the possessor's vertebral equilibrium. However, one soon forgot the peculiarities of his person in listening to the music of his voice as he pictured the lost estate of man and pointed the way to salvation in language fluent and tumultuous as the rush of waters over the precipice of Niagara.

It was true that Elijah Todhunter, horse-dealer and sporting character, had been a fairly regular attendant at the revival services. But the reason was not so much because he had fallen under the peculiar spell of Brother Packard—a spell not likely to be very potent with a man of Elijah's temperament and training—as because he had fallen under a spell of much subtler and more insidious kind, the spell of a woman's heart.

For three months Elijah had been paying somewhat regular calls at the home of Joshua Kipperton, a prosperous farmer just outside the village; and although the excuse always was that 'Lije had to see Josh about some horses or colts, there was a suspicion abroad that the horse-dealer had more pressing business with Josh's daughter Agnes than with Josh. When Elijah came to the revival meeting with Agnes the very next night after she had gone up to the penitent bench the tongue of every local Grundy was set a-wagging. And when he came a second time and a third and a fourth, Duncanville was ready for an immediate announcement of the wedding-day.

Agnes was a good girl, and sincere in her profession of a change of heart, as in her desire that such a change might come to the big, cheerful, kind but worldly fellow whose attentions she had accepted and to whom she yielded a secret homage of affection.

"I'm sorry, Agnes," he said to her, as they went home from one of the meetings. "I wish I could catch this epidemic of religion just to oblige you. But I can't, and there's an end of it. I don't doubt the meetings are doing good, and of course everybody who says so means to lead a better life. I mean to do so myself. I can see where I've made mistakes. But I haven't been intentionally bad, and I can't get up and say I'm a desperate sinner and feel that I'm lost, and all that. Honest now, I can't. There's no use of making a hypocrite of myself, is there?"

Not very deep nor very clear thinking on the momentous question, and yet difficult to meet and answer. Agnes had too much tact to attempt to argue with 'Lije, but she made him promise to go again with her the following night, and she trusted inwardly that his eyes might yet be opened, as so many others' had been.

Agnes had her own plan for rousing 'Lije from what seemed his spiritual lethargy. A very rash and ill-considered plan it was, but in the state of emotional fervor and religious self-hypnotization to which the good people of Duncanville had wrought themselves, many rash and ill-considered plans were looked upon by their authors as flashes of light from on high and special dispensations of Divine wisdom. Agnes believed that her project had come to her from a source beyond her own intelligence. And she proceeded to carry it out with all the zeal and conviction of a chosen instrument.

She had already spoken to the revivalist about 'Lije, and he of the eloquent tongue and tea-biscuit complexion had had a few earnest but unavailing words with the big, straightforward man in one of the after-meetings. Now, she would ask Mr. Packard to make a different move—a flank attack that should take 'Lije unawares in his entrenchments.

So next morning she called on the revivalist and had a long heart-to-heart talk with him—one of those confidential outpourings in which overwrought women delight to indulge with persons of the pastoral profession, over their own "experiences" or the spiritual progress of loved ones.

It was in the after-meeting that night that the assault so carefully planned was delivered. Excitement had now reached such a pitch that nearly everyone stayed for these after-meetings. Agnes Kipperton was there, and beside her sat Elijah Todhunter.

After five minutes of silent prayer, "Just As I Am" was sung, and then the workers commenced moving round through the assembly, engaging in personal exhortation of those who had not yet professed a conviction of sin. Agnes was one of these workers, and as soon as she had left Elijah's side to take her share of the duty in hand, the Rev. Winterburn Packard walked straight down from the platform and seated himself in her place to "talk 'Lije over."

Then, in the prayer that followed this part of the work the revivalist singled out 'Lije for special and pointed reference. He did not mention him to the Almighty by name, but described him in such terms that the veriest dullard knew who was meant, and with a detail that could scarce be considered necessary in communicating with Omniscience. The petition expressed special anxiety for the conversion of this man who might be such a power and who, the petitioner said, he believed was not far from the Kingdom.

'Lije, though schooled by the rough arts of banter and trade to mask his real feelings behind an imperturbable countenance, felt the blood recede from his face—felt icy "creeps" tremble through every vein—felt the hot tide come mounting back in crimson to his brow and tingle in his finger-tips, on recognizing his own picture in the public prayer of the revivalist. It was all so unexpected. In his dull confusion he did not know whether such solicitude, so expressed, was kind, or cruel—brutally cruel—and impertinent. His head had been bowed in reverent attitude. Now, he could not raise it, but it seemed to him as if hundreds of heads had been uplifted and hundreds of eyes turned curiously and expectantly upon his bent, humiliated form.

• • • • • •

It was the next morning that the conversation in the bar-room of the Mansion House took place

'Lije did not go to the revival service that night. Instead he went for a long walk along the third concession, with a pipe between his teeth and Blinker and Beefer at his heels. The Third Concession ran in an opposite direction from the Kipperton farm. It was late when he came back, and, having chained up the terriers turned in.

• • • • • • •

The palpitating clangor of the school-bell beat itself into the dazed consciousness of the slumbering village about two o'clock in the morning. An angry glare danced fitfully in the main street, as red tongues of flame shot through the smoke-vomiting windows in the second story of the bank building. With every puff the sound of breaking glass added a discordant accompaniment to the growing crackle and roar of the flames. All Duncanville was in the street as soon as the bare essentials of dress could be thrown on.

The bank building was three storeys high and of brick—one of the proudest structures in the village. The "junior" roomed in the second storey, and there the fire had originated in the explosion of a lamp left burning for the night. In the third storey lived Judd, the carpenter, his wife, who swept out the bank and "made up" the junior's room, and their three young children.

No one who has not seen a midnight fire in a small community unaccustomed to such casualties and with only the most primitive resources of protection at hand, can form a true conception of the excitement that attends such an experience. Duncanville's bank stood slightly apart from other buildings, but owing to its height and the headway the fire had already gained, much property might be involved. Men dashed madly about collecting buckets and pails of all sorts with which to form a line from the river; others were breaking in a stable door to get out the antiquated hand-engine that had done service at three fires in a dozen years. But above all the babel, and adding a piercing note of tragedy to the calamity, rose the shriek of a mother's voice bewailing the fate of one of her children and beseeching someone to enter the fiery furnace and rescue her darling. With that voice in their ears the motley crowd stood helpless, oppressed with a vast horror. The father and mother and two children were safe; a third, overlooked in the scramble for exit, remained in the doomed building, in the calm slumber of innocence. Father or mother would gladly have gone in to save the missing lamb or perish with it, but strong hands held them back.

"Will no one volunteer?" called the Rev. Winterburn Packard, pacing up and down before the crowd, waving his arms toward the burning building and anon covering his pale face with his hands as if he himself would go, did his strength suffice or could he shut out the impending fate of any who might enter that stronghold of flame. "For the love of God and the price of an immortal soul, will no one volunteer?" So easy is it to call others to great deeds, so hard to step into the breach oneself.

But a cry arose from someone at the back of the crowd—a cry taken up instantly and swelled to a mighty cheer. At one of the third storey windows appeared in the glare of the forked flames and the reek of smoke a man, with a terrified child clinging about his neck.

"A blanket!" he shouted—his voice coming as from a great distance beyond the fire. "Quick, a stout blanket and six strong men. Here, below!"—pointing to a space where there seemed to be a providential opening in the draft of up-curling fire.

Seconds seem like hours, minutes like days, in such a fearsome case. But at last the blanket was brought, and six men, firmly grasping its edges, braced themselves with might and main. Then there was a little struggle piteous to behold at that upper window, the child clinging to its fellow-being in danger, seeming almost to prefer the ordeal of fire to the perils of the hideous plunge. But the little arms were unlocked; the tender, firm and reassuring touch of a master-hand was imparted—perhaps the brave word spoken; and down through the hot, red-litten air shot the small body, straight into the well-held blanket, bouncing up again with the resiliency of a rubber ball, but caught in strong, eager arms—terrified, screaming, but unhurt! And another cheer—a cheer half sigh, half sob—went up from the multitude.

For a time—how long, who of that waiting throng could say?—the man disappeared from the window. Then he came back. All egress except by the dread drop from thirty feet above the flinty street had been cut off. The flames were licking along the upper cornice and framing the windows where he stood with mouldings of fire.

"Can you hold it, boys? It's my only chance!" he shouted, above the roar, to the men with the blanket.

"Courage! We'll stay with you!" came the answer, as they gathered once more where the dry, sickening heat seemed to parch the very blood in their hands and faces. The blanket was stretched. "Ready!" signalled one of the men.

But just then a dull, muffled roar rose from the burning building and spread outward with clouds of countless millions of sparks, that poured from every window and swept upward in a hurricane of living fire. Men cried out in their horror—a wild, formless cry as of some tortured dumb beast—and women turned away with palms pressing hot upon their eyeballs to shut out the sight. The floor of the third storey, freighted with its priceless hero-heart, had fallen in.

And next day, which was Sunday, the Rev. Winterburn Packard preached from the words: "Behold there appeared a chariot of fire . . . and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven."

And much people was added unto the Lord.

ANXIOUS TO PLEASE THE SHAH

The Persian Ruler to be Royally Entertained in the German Capital

Berlin, May 29.—Elaborate plans have been made for the reception and entertainment of the Shah of Persia, who is expected to arrive here within a day or two. A special exhibition of arms, automobiles and electrical machinery has been prepared for his edification. He will spend one day visiting the works of an electrical company in Berlin, another in seeing the vast iron and steel works of Herr Krupp at Essen, and a third in witnessing the operation of wireless telegraphy.

There also will be several state functions in his honor. While all these preparations are being made on the most elaborate scale, it is doubtless the secret hope of the state officials and especially those attached to the lord chamberlain's department that the Persian monarch will not see fit to prolong his stay in German capital. Of all royal visitors the Shah is perhaps the most unwelcome, not for reasons of state but because of the fact that he and his numerous suite bring with them all of their oriental customs regarding etiquette and ways of living. Every morsel of food they eat must be prepared by their own officials and served in their own apartments. As their table manners and ideas of cleanliness are not exactly up to the standards of Western civilization in the twentieth century, it is always found necessary after their departure to entirely disinfect and redecorate the luxurious state apartments set aside for their use during the visit. It is for this reason that a feeling of misgiving is always mixed with the pleasure attending the entertaining of the Shah at the various courts of Europe.

Women in the Home

Incessant Work, Worries and Cares Tell Severely on the Nervous System

Paine's Celery Compound

Woman's System Builder And Health Giver

Incessant work, worry and household cares will, in time, weaken and wreck the nervous system of the strongest woman.

Perhaps the commonest symptom and warning of disease with women is headache with sharp and piercing pains; in some cases the pain may be dull and heavy. Recurring headache frequently arises from loss of sleep, fatigue, disordered digestion, sluggish blood, irritability or despondency. Frequently a sluggish liver and inactive kidneys will produce agonizing headaches.

Paine's Celery Compound should be used without delay to fortify the weakened and inflamed nerves, to create a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, to free the system from morbid waste materials.

The use of Paine's Celery Compound will quickly purify the blood, induce refreshing sleep, good digestion and mental activity. Besides all this, Paine's Celery Compound will restore life and sparkle to the eyes, it will clear the complexion, and give to weak and sick women that full health which makes them happy and lovable.

Queen To Be a Nun

London, May 28 — According to advices from Rome Queen Margherita of Italy has decided definitely to become a nun. Rumors of such a step on the part of the widowed queen have been more or less prevalent since King Humbert's assassination, and it is regarded as probable that the present announcement is correct. Queen Margherita is 51 years of age, and is noted for her learning and her piety.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-'Een, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter sage.

"It would be a mockery, a farce, if I did utter one," he retorted bitterly. "See the trouble you have brought upon me in my old age, and the torture upon your hapless, innocent sister Daisy. Hush! not another word—I will not hear it!"

Hetty fell backward a step or two, her hands clutched tightly together over her heart.

It was a strange journey; not one of the silent party who seated themselves midway in the drawing-room coach ever forgot it.

Like two statues Daisy and Hetty sat staring from the windows, but neither saw the little villages that were scattered among the green sloping hills as the train dashed by. It was evening when they reached the village in which the old stone church was situated.

They could see the lights from the kitchen windows of the old farmhouse that had once been their home, as they wended their way silently up the grass-grown path.

The key was obtained from the parsonage in the rear, and the wax tapers at the altar were soon lighted, just as they had been lighted on that memorable night, throwing long, dark, grotesque shadows on the bare walls and dim aisles that stretched away into utter darkness.

The old minister took his position just as he took it that night, calling Harold St. John to stand before him.

Then to the surprise of all present he motioned to Daisy first instead of to Hetty.

"Take your place beside him," he commanded, and almost fainting with terror, Daisy obeyed.

"You are to answer the questions put to you as the bride of that night answered," she heard him say.

Then in a solemn tone he commenced to read the words of the marriage service.

In a clear, sonorous voice, Harold St. John made his responses; then the old minister turned to the trembling girl at his side, and in a dying voice she answered the question asked of her.

The minister laid down his book and turned toward the breathless group pressing close about them.

"This is the bride whom I married to this man on that fatal night!" he said solemnly. "There is no mistake, I assure you. Every accent of the timid voice, every play of the features fixed itself indelibly on my mind that night. As now, the girl seemed under great mental excitement. In the presence of the Almighty God I solemnly swear that this one—not her sister standing yonder—is the lawfully wedded wife of this man!"

A wild cry broke from Alexander Hamilton's lips.

"I do not, I will not believe it," he cried, springing forward, "unless I hear it from her own lips. Daisy, my love, look up and tell me it is not true, that you are my wife, and not—not his."

"Remember," said the minister, solemnly, "God and the angels are listening to the answer you give this most unfortunate gentleman. Speak the truth."

Daisy raised her blue eyes to Aleck's face. She forgot all the rest crowding around them. She remembered only him.

"Aleck," she moaned, in a dying, gasping voice, "would to heaven I could die as the words leave my lips. It is true, Aleck, my lost love!" she wailed; "but love for you tempted me. I thought you would never know, and I would not give you up."

She saw him start back white with terror, and like a beautiful bird who has received the arrow of death in its bosom, Daisy swayed forward and fell at his feet with a wailing cry, and although he was amazed, stricken dumb with grief and horror at the enormity of the sin she had committed, his heart bled for her.

He stooped to raise her, but Harold St. John hurled him back.

"Just this once," implored Aleck. "Let me raise her in my arms and whisper just one word of comfort and forgiveness. We have learned to love each other so well. I know she is yours; the poor girl admits it. I cannot dispute your right. Let me raise her just this once and look into the face that has been heaven on earth to me—the light of my life, then I will go away!"

"Stand back! Lay your hands upon even one hair of her golden head and I will kill you!" cried Harold St. John. "You have stolen Daisy's heart from me, and I could curse you for it—curse your low, smooth, winning voice, your handsome face, and your gentlemanly ways. No doubt you would like me to give her up to you!" he sneered. "Know this, that I do not love her. All my love turned to hate—do you hear me—hate! when I tracked her down and found her with you; but for all that I shall take her away with me. No matter how she may shrink from me, for I am her lord and master!" he cried excitedly, his dark face glowing with rage.

Her white face was turned toward Aleck, oh! so pathetically lovely in its terrible woe — and in a voice tragic in its despair, cried faintly:

"Must I go with him, Aleck? Leave you and go with him out into the darkness and bitterness of death, for it would be that."

"Certainly," retorted Harold St. John; "what a question— what need to answer it—you are to go with me.

CHINESE REVOLT SPREADS

Province of Shantung is Now Affected—Protecting Missionaries

Pekin, May 30.—Forty soldiers have been stationed at Pangchuang, in the province of Shantung, to protect the American Board's mission there which is under the charge of Mr. Arthur Smith.

The Governor of Shantung fears that the revolt in the Province of Chili, which it is believed Viceroy Yuan Shih Kai temporarily suppressed will now spread to Shantung. A number of ex-boxers and gentry are implicated in the present troubles.

CANADA'S CORONATION ARCH

"The Future Granary of The Empire" to Be the Read on It

London, May 30.—The coronation route authorities have granted Canada a fine position at Whitehall, near Westminster Abbey, on which will be erected an arch 56 feet high and 60 feet wide, surmounted by the words, "Canada, the Future Granary of the Empire." These words will be electrically illuminated at night.

SHOE COMBINE FOR CANADA.

Leading Firms Meet in Montreal to Try and Form one

Montreal, May 29.—A private meeting of the leading Canadian boot and shoe manufacturers was held here this afternoon and the objects of the meeting, as stated, were to discuss a proposal to form a combine of all the leading boot and shoe manufacturers of Canada.

Among those who attended the meeting were J. D. King and C. R. Johnston, of Toronto, W. A. Marsh, and John Ritchie, of Quebec, as well as representatives of Montreal firms. The meeting adjourned without reaching any definite decision but another meeting will be held at an early date.

Grand Trunk Appointments

The following changes and appointments on the G.T.R. are announced: W. E. Costello is appointed assistant superintendent on the 15th, 16th, 17th 18th, 19th, and 20th districts, in charge of all matters pertaining to transportation. Mr. Fred. Vice is appointed master of transportation; the position of trainmaster of the 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th districts is abolished; the jurisdiction of Trainmaster P. J. Lynch is extended over the 21st district. These changes are in consequence of the resignation of Messrs H. E. Whittenberger and C. J. Bevington.

WILHELMINA'S RECOVERY.

The Dutch People Felt Sure That Queen Would be Spared

London, May 29.—In spite of the sincere joy over the recovery of Queen Wilhelmina, says the Brussels correspondent of the Times there is no spontaneous movement in Holland for a day of national rejoicing. The correspondent says that the reason for this given by a Hollander is characteristic of the Dutch people and their loyalty. The Hollander said:

"The feeling prevailed from the first that the Queen would recover. It seemed to us that Providence would not so far forsake us as to take away our young sovereign, the heart of our country."

On Gettysburg Battlefield

Gettysburg, Pa., May 30.—President Roosevelt will deliver the memorial address to-day at the annual exercises on Gettysburg battlefield. The ceremonies will be held in the national cemetery, where the graves of fallen heroes will be decorated with flowers and flags by school children and veterans of the civil war. In his address the President will call attention to the lessons of duty and valor to be learned from the battlefield, and will pay a tribute to the courage of the soldiers of the south as well as the north.

—The Times has a letter dealing with the selection of a representative for the coronation by the Commanding Officer of the 57th Regiment. It will appear in a day or two.

Fables For the Fair.

A LITTLE work called "Fables for the Fair," by Josephine Dodge Daskam, is attracting amused notice in London, where it is published. Here is an example of the fables:

"There was once a woman who had the opportunity of marrying either of two brothers she preferred. Since they had both of them good points she decided to consult their sister as to which in her opinion would make the best husband. 'I think,' she said, 'that I shall take John. He is so good.' 'But,' said the sister, 'he gobbles his soup and sugars his lettuce. To say nothing of buttering his bread in slabs. We have never been able to teach him better.' 'But he reads Browning so beautifully,' cried the woman. 'You will hear him eat soup oftener than you will hear him read Browning,' said the sister."

Then, as to the other brother, "I am sure he would give his life for me," cried the woman. "If you will pause and consider," replied the sister, "you will realise that the probabilities of his being called upon to do that are very few indeed. Whereas the fact that he is very careless about brushing his clothes will be daily apparent to you."

The book is full of good things, among them the fable of a singer who sang "Annie Laurie" in a muslin gown to a country audience. "Goodness alive!" said they, "is that all? Our Jenny knows that piece." But the rival wore silver brocade and sang in German and French, whereupon the country paper remarked that "it was a real pleasure to hear old favorites rendered with such spirit." This teaches us that when in Rome we should do as the Romans don't.

Then there is the fable of the woman who could not help herself:

"There was once a woman who had never learned how to swim, although she went in bathing every day in the summer. She had a friend who had acquired the art with some trouble, and was very proud of her proficiency in it. 'It is absurd,' said this friend, 'to live near the water and not swim. It makes you very attractive to good swimmers if you can go out with them and they do not feel that you are a drag on their pleasures. What would you do in case you fell off the pier? Now watch me!' With these words she dived off into the water and swam about by herself. 'It is a good thing to have a woman swim so well,' said one of the men near by. 'Now if any of the children fall into the water she can rescue them.' Just then the woman who could not help herself uttered a scream and fell into the sea. Instantly five men leaped in to rescue her, and spent the rest of the day resuscitating her and enquiring how she was, leaving the swimmer to dive by herself. This teaches that nothing succeeds like distress."

On the 'Gyptian Railway.

FIRST TOURIST—Isn't this lovely? Just think! Pharaoh lived here, and — and Cheops, and — and Moses! It makes your head swim, doesn't it?

Second Tourist—I expect it's the bad air. It hurts my head, too. Is that the Nile over there?

"Mercy! I suppose so. Isn't it dirty? It doesn't seem as if Cleopatra could have rode in her barge to meet Marc Antony down that horrid stream, does it!"

"No, it doesn't. But that was a long time ago, wasn't it?"

"I believe so. I've seen the play, but I don't remember just when it was."

"See that crocodile basking in the sun!"

"Is he basking? Oh, Maud, that reminds me. How are you going to have your new basque trimmed?"

"Mercy, there's the Sphinx!"

"What's the Sphinx?"

"Why, it's a thing that asked you riddles, you know. Dear me, I'm not sure whether that's the Sphinx or one of the Pyramids. Just look at all those children! They must be going in for swimming."

"No, dear, it's the effect of the mild climate."

"Look there! That must be the desert. But I can't see any caravans. Perhaps it isn't a desert. Perhaps it's a mirage."

"What's a mirage, dear?"

"Oh, it's something they see in deserts. Everything is upside down, you know."

"Isn't that awful? Oh, see that handsome native? What a picture! He must be a sheikh at least. What's he doing?"

"What a shame! Isn't it nice to travel on a railroad where they don't have any smoke or cinders?"

"Yes, and do you notice what a balmy odor comes in at the window?"

"Yes. Isn't it fragrant? So spicy. Can't you smell the cloves? Ah-a-a, I like to breathe it in."

"So do I. I'll ask the conductor what it is. There he is. Conductor, please!"

The conductor—Yes, ma'am?

"Conductor, where does that spicy smell come from?"

One of Tom Reed's Retorts.

"No matter what you may say," declared Representative Babcock of Wisconsin to Chairman Payne of the Ways and Means Committee when discussing the Babcock proposition to put all steel products on the free list, "I am right, and I know it, and when a man is right he is in the majority." "Just so," replied Payne, "but you remember that Tom Reed used to say, 'God and one make a majority, but many a martyr has been burned at the stake while the votes were being counted.'"

The Real Reason.

A visitor to Dublin refused the services of a driver because of his ragged clothing. "Ah, sur," replied the Jarvie's friend, "you must excuse him, sur; he can't help it."

"Ah, your honor, he has no wife."

"Then why doesn't he get another coat?" "He can't, sur, I assure you he can't."

"Why can't he?" "Well, sur, it has been tried once or twice, but it can't be [illegible] so very tickle [illegible] Dublin [illegible] a tape or [illegible]."

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a matter suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. TIMES]

—There was a hot time in the old town last night.

—Two furnished rooms to let. Apply at 508 George street.

—The time table of the City of Peterborough and Water Lily appears in another column.

—A bicyclist had to pay $2 yesterday morning to the Magistrate for riding on the sidewalk.

—St. James' Choir will practice on Saturday evening at the usual hour. The boys will meet at 6.45 for special practice.

—Ping pong and all summer games, also hammocks in large varieties at Times Bookstore.

—St. John's Mission Band will hold a sale of work and an entertainment tonight. A good programme is promised.

—The Times' circulation is constantly on the up-grade. The average number of copies printed during the present month has exceeded 2,500.

—A fine of $5 and costs was imposed on a local hotel keeper yesterday for allowing dice to be thrown in his bar for the drinks.

—The new lock gates at Hastings have been completed and placed in position. This lock now is in first class shape to accommodate the increasing boat and other traffic at this point.

—Real estate is rapidly advancing. A lot was sold the other day, in a good locality for $37.50 per foot. A year ago $25 a foot was more than it would bring.

—June clearing sale of sporting and fancy goods at Times Bookstore. Prices away down. Also a lot of bound books reduced to only 15 cents a copy.

—Now is the time to subscribe for The Times—Peterborough's brightest and best daily newspaper. Will be delivered to subscribers in town and Ashburnham for 25c. per month.

—Commodore Calcutt deserves the greatest praise for the splendid service which he proposes to give on the Otonabee this season. There will be a daily boat, with a weekly run to Hastings.

The Magazine Supplement, recently introduced as a feature of the Sunday Edition, is unique. It has many notable features, including "The Man in the Street," a bright collection of gossip and stories about men of prominence.

—The very latest creations in ladies' stationery, sealing sets, playing cards, engraved visiting cards, wedding invitations, society emblems, etc. Headquarters for "the best" in athletic goods, carbon papers, typewriter ribbons, erasers, paper fasteners, ink stands, standard blank, copying and memo books. Inks, mucilage, paste and everything for the office, the library and the school room. Fountain pens, etc. Mail orders from our out of town friends will receive prompt attention. Times Bookstore, Market Block, Peterborough.

—Mr. Walter Stocker, our efficient bill poster, has been working overtime during the past few weeks, with a large stock of assistants. He has put up more election literature in that time than ever before in the same period. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good.

—Here is what a lady has to say for Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema—"I am glad to say that I find complete cure of my distressing case of eczema. My hands were so bad the nails would come off. I used one box and my hand is all healed." Price 60 cents a box or three boxes for $1.00 For sale by Ormond & Walsh.

—There is a lady residing on Water street who has never for an instant removed her wedding ring since it was put on, 28 years ago, by her husband. She has never even seen the inscription inside the ring, for her husband had only bought the circlet on the wedding morning; she has not yet examined it, and, after it was on, she made up her mind that she would not remove it till she had to. She had no idea then, though, that she would keep it on her finger 28 years. Today she could not be tempted to remove it. This idea, indeed, has become a superstition with her, and she is convinced that something untoward would befall her should she break her resolve.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

—The many friends of Mr. McFarlane Wilson are pleased to see him again on the streets, after his serious illness.

—Rev. Mr. Gunior, of Smith, was in town yesterday and gave The Times a call.

AMONG THE ODDFELLOWS

Latest Items of Interest Pertaining to the Local Fraternity

—This week Peterboro Lodge No. 111, I.O.O.F., will meet on Friday evening instead of Thursday which was election day. It is hoped there will be a large attendance of members on Friday evening as the subordinate lodge officers will be elected, and the past Grands will vote for Grand Lodge officers by the Hare-Spence system, which is being tried this year for the first time.

The elections in Otonabee Lodge No. 13 were held last Monday evening the last meeting of this month.

The District Committee will meet in Peterboro on Friday evening, June 6, at 8 o'clock.

Committees have been appointed to arrange for decorations on Thursday June 19. Members as well as the public are asked to keep the date in mind. The committee will meet on Friday at 7.30 in the lodge rooms.

THOUSANDS SEE RETURNS

THE SPLENDID REPORTS FURNISHED BY THE TIMES

The Market Square Crowded with People from Dark Until Midnight

The Times once more scored a decided hit last night when it furnished the people with a limelight exhibition on the market square, giving the election returns of the Province, hot from the wire. A special wire had been placed in The Times office, and the returns, as fast as they came in, were inscribed on glass, the work of half a minute, and the glass handed to Mr. Roy, the operator, who transferred it to a large sheet of canvas, which covered the rear of the Times' building. Thus, about one minute elapsed from the time the despatch was received in the Times office until it was exposed to the view of eight or ten thousand people on the market square. We gave the people a much better and quicker service than that given in the political committee rooms. Mr. R. M. Roy, who looked after the artistic position of the work, spared no pains or expense to make the exhibition a success.

To those who assisted by giving us advertisements, we tender our sincere thanks. The following are the names—Messrs. A. H. Stratton & Co., Geo. Stevens Ormond & Walsh, J. T. Stenson, J. C. Turnbull, R. Brown & Co., W. J. Doughty & Son, Calcutt Brewing Co., T. Hurley & Co., Best Stove Co., Gough Bros., J. J. Turner & Son, R. Hall & Son, Henry & Co., H. P. Hennedy, H. Long, Tate Optical Co., McAllister Milling Co., W. H. Meldrum, Thos. Barrie & Co., R. H. Leary, W. G. Green, R. Hicks & Co., R. A. Dutton, D. J. DeVine, J. Sutcliffe & Sons.

A Singular Incident

Prof. O'Brien, scientific palmist and phrenologist, who has been at the Collins' house for the past two weeks, leaves for Napanee, to-morrow morning. During his visit here, a great interest has been manifest in these sciences, and the professor's readings and delineations have proven extraordinarily accurate. During his visit at Trenton, a singular instance occurred which goes to prove the ability of the prof. in occult sciences. The wife of the late J. W. Cunningham, whose husband was then lost from the Guelph sanitarium, consulted the prof. and was told that she would never see her husband alive again—that he was drowned and his body would be found in a river. This, only a short time later proved to be too true. Since being here the prof. has made himself acquainted with some of the environments around and about Picton and says that it is the cleanest, brightest and snappiest town in Ontario. He will visit here again for a short time later in the season.

St. John's Church

This evening beginning at seven o'clock the members of the Mission Band, will hold a sale of work and an entertainment for the missionary cause. The children have undertaken to clothe a girl in one of the Indian homes and it is hoped all friends will show their sympathy by attending. Admission ten cents.

Off for the Coronation

The men who will represent "C" Squadron of the 3rd Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons at the Coronation, will be Sergt.-Major Cleghorn and Sergt. J. J. Duggis, two non-commissioned officers. Sergt.-Major Cleghorn has been a member of the regiment for a number of years, and has taken a course in the Military School. Sergt. Duffus is a young member of the Dragoons, having enlisted at the age of nineteen, five years ago. He is also a graduate of the Royal Military College at Toronto, and holds a first class military certificate. It is expected that the boys will leave on the C.P.R. to-night.

C. O. F. Church Service

The local members of the Canadian Order of Foresters are requested to meet at the Simcoe street Hall on Sunday evening at 6.15, and proceed in a body to St. Paul's Church, where a special sermon will be preached by Rev. Dr. Torrance. Visiting brethren are invited to attend.

By Order.

DOURO.

—The crops are looking fine after the recent rains.

—The Douro electors braced themselves to give Mr. Anderson a great vote. They held him up on tip-toes.

—It is agreed by the Douro folks in general that The Times is the most popular family paper in Canada. County Constable Crowley says that he can't see how any family can be up to the times without it.

—Captain Grisdale ran a shift to Davids Wharf, Cooktown on McBride river, where John McBride met and escorted him to polling place No. 3.

—Friends would be very glad to hear that Mr. Louis Sullivan, who has been ill for some time, was recently relieved by having up a large tape worm, after taking two doses of Dr. Ford's Conservative Cure.

Death of Mrs. Allan McCarthy

The death of Mrs. McCarthy, wife of Mr. Allan McCarthy, of Ashburnham, will come with a great shock to her many friends in Peterborough and Ashburnham. The deceased lady had been ailing about six weeks. The cause of death was catarrh of the stomach. Mrs. McCarthy was a Miss Evans, and was born in Otonabee 54 years ago. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn her demise. She was a sincere christian woman, being a member of the Mark Street Methodist Church, and was greatly beloved. The funeral will leave the family residence, Concession Street, Ashburnham, to-morrow, Saturday, at 2.30 p.m., for the Little Lake Cemetery. The Times extends its sincere sympathy to the bereaved relatives.

CONSERVATIVES MAY WIN PARTIES NEARLY A TIE

Latest Returns Give the Opposition Three More Seats

Lenox, Algoma and Manitoulin Go Conservative

Fuller returns show that the parties are nearly even the standing being 50 Liberals and 48 Conservatives. A despatch received last night gave the above figures as the correct standing of the two parties. The Mail says that the Conservatives claim North Grey, which would, if this is correct, leave the parties a tie. The Times is of the opinion that the Conservatives have a fair chance of securing a majority, for the recounts are almost sure to favor them. A change of two seats would place Mr. Whitney on top, at least for the time being.

The latest returns from Manitoulin show the election of Gamey, the Conservative candidate, by 30 majority. In Algoma, Smyth, Conservative, has 10 majority, with 8 polls to hear from, which are expected to increase his majority. Lennox, also, is conceded to the Conservatives.

NOTES OF THE FRAY.

Ashburnham, which never before gave a Liberal majority, gave Mr. Anderson 24. This was a surprise for both parties.

There was considerable betting on Stratton's majority, bets being made that his majority would not exceed 500.

Hon. Mr. Stratton has the largest majority of any of the Cabinet Ministers, and the largest majority of any candidate outside of Toronto.

The local Conservatives are extracting what comfort they can from the hope pressed by the Toronto World that the recounts may result in the overthrow of the Liberals.

The Town Hall, Douro, was a great surprise, resulting in a vote of 100 to 7 in favor of Anderson.

Battle of Sag Harbor

New York, May 30 — New York's observance of Memorial Day was one of the most notable New York has seen for a number of years. Business was everywhere suspended and the holiday was general. The most notable feature of the celebration was the unveiling this afternoon of the soldiers' and sailors' memorial in Riverside Drive. Governor Odell, Mayor Low and other persons of prominence took part in the attendant ceremonies. At the customary exercises at Grant's Tomb the oration was delivered by Judge Thomas G. Jones, of Montgomery, Ala.

Items of News

London, May 30.—Santos-Dumont, the aeronaut, who intended to give exhibitions with his airship at the Crystal Palace next week, arrived from Paris to-day and found that a few hours previously his balloon had been cut to pieces, completely destroying one-third of it. The cutting was done with knives, and large rings of the silk coverings were [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] by the fact that two of Santos-Dumont's [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the shed where the airship was kept. Police and detectives were summoned to clear up the affair if possible. It will be [illegible] [illegible] before a new cover can be made.

New York, May 31.—Carnegie Hall will be the scene of great times tonight, when the Salvation Army lads and lassies assemble to celebrate the Twenty-second Anniversary of the organization. The Commander will give an address on the "[illegible] and Prospects of the Salvation Army," and the Consul will speak on "Woman's Place and Work in the Army."

THE BOARD OF TRADE

ADOPT RESOLUTIONS FOR THE COMING CONFERENCE AT TORONTO

It Favors the Encouragement of Trade Relations with the Empire, and Rejects a Resolution on Defence

The Board of Trade met last night when there were present President D. W. Dumble and Messrs. J. H. Burnham, E. B. Edwards, J. A. Colverville, J. Hughes-Charles, C. Fessenden, A. P. Poussette, J. M. Garvin, W. J. Morrow, Robert Fair and J. J. Hartley.

Letters of regret at inability to be present were read from Messrs. E. G. Patterson and Frank Matthews.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were taken as read.

The president explained that the meeting was called to discuss and prepare resolutions on trade relations within the Empire, reduction of postage on newspapers and periodicals, between Canada and Great Britain, the establishment of a fast Atlantic steamship line for Canadian ports, and the defence of the Empire.

Three questions are of great importance, and it is to be deplored that greater interest in them was not manifested in the attendance both of members of the board and citizens in general.

A conference of the Board of Trades of the Dominion is to be held in Toronto on June 4th and 5th when these questions are to be taken up. The proceedings will close with a great banquet tendered visiting delegates by the Toronto Board of Trade.

TRADE RELATIONS.

Trade relations within the Empire was coupled with the names of Messrs. J. H. Burnham, Mr. D. O'Connell and J. Hughes-Charles.

Mr. Burnham in the course of a very able address said that there underlies this subject a desire for the unification of the Empire. Trade relations between the mother country and Canada, are, as a fact, hostile. Sentimental imperialism has resulted in nothing but diverse trade relations and diverse trade policies, and these end eventually to result in a dismemberment of the Empire. All actions on the part of Canada seems to trend to a desire for the unification of the Empire with some definite measure of Preferential Trade.

Mr. Burnham moved, seconded by Mr. Hughes-Charles, that it be resolved that in view of the use and development of the British Empire, it is necessary that every possible measure be taken tending to the development of the trade relations of the various members of the Empire, if harmony between those members and their ultimate permanent unification be deemed desirable, and this Board considers that it is desirable.—Adopted.

Mr. Hughes-Charles said that England has not faith and confidence in her colonies; she is selfish and desires to secure to herself the larger share of Trade. He opined that England is tired of Free Trade and even now has inserted the thin edge of the wedge of a Protective Tariff; she practically adopted it when introducing the embargo on cattle, and the general talk in that country today is in favor of a tariff on foreign imports.

Mr. D. O'Connell did not think the unification of the Empire, with preferential trade relations possible owing to the varied conditions of its many colonies. It is, he argued, necessary for Canadian people to leave sentiment aside, and look well after their own commercial interests. He did not think it profitable for the Dominion to have given a preferential tariff of 33 1-3 per cent to the mother country without receiving some substantial measure in return. He preferred a cultivation of trade relations with the country south of us in preference to the Mother Land.

Mr. J. M. Garvin took exception to Mr. O'Connell's expressions of preference to the United States. He was very much disappointed to read that England when recently adopting that small tariff had not given a preference to the colonies, which preference, he maintained would lead to the helpful development of those colonies. He believed Canada and her sister colonies must have protection in the interest of their manufactures.

Mr. Dumble, in reviewing the discussion thought the preferential tariff given the Mother Country by Canada without demanding any equivalent return a very wise action that would eventually lead to good results.

TRANSPORTATION.

This subject was coupled with the names of Messrs. A. P. Poussette, C. Fessenden, W. H. [illegible] and R. B. Rogers.

Mr. A. P. Poussette moved, seconded by Mr. Fessenden, that it is resolved that trade relations within the Empire can be adequately encouraged only by the utmost facility of transportation, and therefore it is expedient that the governments of Great Britain and the colonies should by [illegible] [illegible] to proper [illegible], [illegible] the [illegible] of independent navigation companies which should be [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] trade.—Adopted.

Mr. Fessenden remarked that one thing Canada wants is the [illegible] of the St. Lawrence river, which [illegible] special [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] transportation across the Atlantic, not only of our own products but those of the United States. This continent [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the establishment of a fast Atlantic Line from a Canadian point to England would assist trade in the Dominion and increase our export trade and add to the volume of traffic in general through Canadian channels.

Mr. Kelderhouse's opinion was that transportation, whether by rail or water, always finds its level under all circumstances. He favored the development of canals and a greater utilization of great waterways in order to facilitate through transportation to the Mother Country. He scored the Dominion Government for not opening up that portion of the Trent Valley Canal already completed. As to Preferential Tariff, he said, you will never see the day when Canada will have a preference in the English markets for our food products. The English people

GREAT BRITAIN'S PRESTIGE AND THE BOER WAR

How a Leading Russian Paper Regards Britain

Her Influence Vastly Increased Since War Began

Special to The Times.

London, May 31.—The Chronicle says: Turning to two other spheres, where it has been diligently asserted that the South African embroglio has diminished British prestige—Persia and Siam—it is interesting and appropriate to quote the opinion of a Russian journal of some position, the Novoe Vremya, which, in alluding to concessions recently obtained by Great Britain in these regions laments as follows: "It seemed that the South African war, which was employing all the land forces of Great Britain, would influence the international situation of that country and fetter its liberty of action. It turns out, however, that this peculiar state of things does not in any way prevent English diplomacy from achieving very substantial triumphs, and that the triumphs of Great Britain has decidedly and greatly increased during the past six months, and in the East prestige is everything."

It is only necessary further to point out the decisive effect, which the treaty with Japan has had upon international relations in the far East, to emphasize the fact of the British cabinet being quite able to preserve the "balance of power" now as she was three years back.

These reminders are necessary, in view of the renewed attempts to discredit the emphatic utterance of Lord Salisbury a few days ago, that if the majorities voted for a termination of the war, the result would not have been achieved by the surrender of a single condition which the British cabinet considers "vital." Of those vital conditions the principal one is that "not one shred of political independence shall be retained by the two Republics—personal liberty is another matter."

New York Keeps Holiday

New York, May 30 — The historical society of Sag harbor, L.I., celebrated the 125th anniversary of the battle of Sag Harbor to-day, when a handsome granite monument in memory of the capture of the British fort by Lieutenant Colonel Meigs and his famous whaleboat expedition, was unveiled with interesting ceremonies. There was a parade of veterans, the fire department and various patriotic organizations, and at the close of the exercises the soldiers graves in Oakland Cemetery were decorated.

A Healthy and Sound Body Will Enable Us to Battle Against the Wrongs and Injuries of Our Enemiee

Paine's Celery Compound

Banishes Disease, Establishes Health and Gives us Physicial Strength to Maintain Our Place in Life's Conflict

Many of us find life hard and full of pain. While we cannot well avoid the sufferings that result from wrongs and injuries, we can keep ourselves from the pains and ravages of bodily ailments and diseases, and maintain that full measure of health that will enable us to meet the wrongs that assail us from day to day.

If you are rundown, fretful, despondent irritable, sleepless be assured you are becoming physically impaired and weakened. If the relaxed and sluggish action of the excretory organs has loaded the blood and body with poison, producing headache, rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney and liver troubles, then disease is encircling you in its chains.

Prompt use of Paine's Celery Compound will save the [illegible] parts of the body from yielding to disease. The great medicine [illegible] weak and exhausted nerves from prostration and removes every feeling of exhaustion and despondency. It cures and makes those who are bound by disease and suffering and gives them a new lease of life. Mr. [illegible] Pierce, King St., St. John, N.B., writes thus:

"I suffered terribly from constipation, weakness, [illegible], kidney and liver troubles; I was also subject to those tired, weary feelings and had a slight touch of skin disease. The first piece of Paine's Celery Compound relieved me; and now, after having taken three bottles, I feel much better. I am not constipated, I [illegible] my usual feelings, and I can eat and sleep well. It is a grand remedy, and I hope all who read this may benefit by my recommendation."

Naval Militia Meet

Baltimore, Md., May 31. — Representatives from seventeen states were present to-day when the National Naval Militia Association began its seventh annual meeting aboard the old sloop-of-war Dale in Baltimore harbor. The important work before the meeting, which lasts three days, is the framing of a bill to be introduced in Congress, providing for the establishment of a national naval reserve.

EDITORIAL NOTES

At election times many men vote according to the inspiration they receive. If we are to believe the defeated candidate, that inspiration can scarcely be said to come from above. It usually comes from the depths of someone's pockets.

• • • •

Politics and the poor are ever with us.

• • • •

The greatest good to the greatest number. Is that the make of the average politician. Not a bit of it, unless it be that the greatest number is number one.

• • •

It is with the bye-elections in view that the shouting is being done. If the people can be made to believe that the government is safe in any event, the government will have the advantage in the bye-elections. If they can be convinced that the government is doomed, the Conservatives will have a good chance of winning a majority of the bye-elections. Thus there is good reason for strenuous efforts being made by every paper to prove that its own side is on top.

• • • •

And now for the referendum.

• • • •

It was a sad blow to the temperance people of East and West Peterborough when the election returns were in to hear that the Tory candidates had taken a drop.

• • • •

The "People's Jimmy" in West Peterborough naturally feels elated over the result in his riding. But how could he help it when the great family journal supported him?

• • • •

This great family journal supported Mr. Stratton. Result: an increased majority for him over what it was four years ago.

• • • •

So Whitney was well whacked after all.

• • • •

The Review said the other day that the Liberal party would be on the rocks of defeat. They will very soon be on the rocks in the treasury.

• • • •

It is expected that the great Conservative party will, not in anger but in sorrow, proceed to turn Mr. Whitney's picture to the wall.

• • • •

"We will whack Whitney" has not been transformed into "Whitney will whack us."

• • • •

The Liberals are no hogs. They have conceded as many seats as they could spare to their opponents.

• • • •

It looks as if our friend Dr. Ford will have to eat Crow in East Peterborough.

• • • •

Dr. Ford, in the East, put up a clean, manly campaign, and he has nothing to be ashamed of.

• • • •

• • • •

The Times heartily congratulates Honest William Anderson on the result in East Peterborough. His victory over so worthy an opponent as Dr. Ford is something to feel proud of. Mr. Anderson apparently lives in the hearts of the people of [illegible].

• • • •

There are a few swelled heads in town [illegible] that election [illegible] will [illegible] it.

• • • •

• • • •

An original ode is expected shortly from Mr. Garvin on "Politics, Past and Present." The great [illegible] is better "stuff" [illegible] than during the campaign. [illegible] under [illegible] horrible Grits [illegible] it.

• • • •

• • • •

• • • •

It is a long lane that has no turning. Mr. Whitney says he can see the bend in the road.

Adam Beck beat Old Legs in London. No doubt the Grit man wishes that neck was broken.

DETROIT UNITED RAILWAY

The intelligent investor in listed securities having a current market is seeking that which possesses not only intrinsic merit and remunerative income, but future enhancement in market value as well. Conviction on these three important points once firmly established among the investing public concerning a particular security is followed by three results—demand, security of stock and advancing prices.

It is good to know of such opportunities, for it enables the public to invest safely and add to their individual accumulation of this world's goods, thereby increasing in a measure the world's happiness, and the result is satisfactory, not only to the investor, but to his broker as well, particularly if the broker in question happens to be the dispenser of such a bit of happiness.

Detroit United Railway stock is on the eve of an advance in price which will carry quotations from the present level of 74 to par. The advance is inevitable for the simple reason that as a substantial investment of recognized merit the stock is selling at least $25 per share below what it is worth. This statement, made with full confidence, is not an idle boast, but is based on cold existing facts; and if any among my readers are skeptical in any degree let them look into the facts and figures and they will be convinced.

It is although an absurd proposition that the stock of a city traction company having no competition, paying regular dividends of 4 per cent. and earning 6 per cent., should be quoted at any such ridiculously low a figure as the present price.

All that is necessary is for the public to know that a good thing like Detroit United is available, and the disparity between present quotations and real worth will soon be bridged over by the most legitimate means known, and that is by public buying on broad scale. At the present time three separate financial interests are negotiating for the Cleveland holdings around 70. In the meantime it is exceedingly probable that public buying, now well under way, will absorb these holdings at prices ranging from the present level to par, and the syndicates referred to will suddenly wake up to find that they have missed an unusual opportunity by pursuing a penny-wise and poundfoolish policy in regard to price.

HERE ARE THE FACTS

Detroit United Railway is a consolidation of all the electric railways in and about Detroit. There are no competing lines. The total mileage is 380 miles, having a total bonded indebtedness of $15,880,000, which is $41,789.00 per mile, and it may be remarked that this is exceedingly conservative and less per mile than that of any other city road in the United States.

The total authorized and outstanding capital stock $12,500,000, which is $32,895.00 per mile, so that there is 74,684.00 per mile in bonds and stock. Cincinnati Street Railway is bonded and stocked for $89,230 per mile; St. Louis United almost $167,000 per mile; Twin City Rapid Transit, $125,642 per mile. These comparisons prove the absence of the customary watering process, more recently known as "Morganizing."

Year Ending—	1900	1901
Earnings, gross	$2,[illegible],276	$2,942,237
Earnings, net	1,250,773	1,066,478

Fixed charges	6[illegible],217	676,940
Surplus for stock	612	470,129
Per cent on stock	0.10	3.26
Price of stock		73 1-3
Population served	400,000

Gross Earnings...4 months July—Oct 1901 $1,120,376

Gross Earnings...January 1—March 31,

1901	1902
$[illegible]	$766,682

I am indebted to Mr. Guy M. Walker, of 20 [illegible] street, New York, for the following facts in regard to Detroit United Railway stock, as compared to Twin City Rapid Transit common stock, now quoted at 125. First dividend of 1 per cent was paid on Twin City stock in August, 1897; in 1898, 2 per cent.; 1901, 3 1-2 per cent.; 1902, February, 2 per cent. It should be borne in mind that Twin City Rapid Transit [illegible] as a 4 per cent. dividend payer; that there is a [illegible] per cent. preferred stock, ahead of it, and yet the common stock is quoted at 125, or [illegible] per share above Detroit, which is [illegible] established as a 4 per cent. dividend payer. [illegible] Twin City stock is selling too high or Detroit too low.

In comparing the [illegible] value of the stocks of the two companies, it should be noted that while the bonded debt of Twin City amounts to [illegible] per mile, that of the Detroit United is only $41,789.00 per mile, while the stock per mile of Twin City is [illegible] to Detroit United [illegible], making the total capitalization of the Twin City Rapid Transit Company [illegible] per mile, as against only $74,[illegible] per mile for Detroit United. The [illegible] served are almost exactly the same.

"The percentages earned by the two properties for their [illegible] stock are almost the same, though the earnings for Detroit United for 1901 show a slightly larger gain over the earnings for 1900 than does the Twin City Rapid Transit Company.

"It should, however, be noted that Twin City is making its present earnings on a cost of operation amounting to only 44.00 per cent. of the gross earnings, which is far below normal, and which certainly can not be maintained in the future, while Detroit United is expending for operation [illegible] 64.70 per cent. of its gross earnings, which is slightly above normal, and which ought to be reduced to approximately 60 per cent. within the next year or two.

"It can, therefore, readily be seen that Detroit United promises considerably greater returns to its stockholders for the immediate future than Twin City, and it is unreasonable to suppose that the stock will continue at its present low quotations of 74, while Twin City is considered to be worth and apparently holds firm at approximately $125.00 per share."

FUTURE INCREASED EARNINGS

On the basis of the actual earnings for the first three months of 1902, Detroit United will show for the present fiscal year, in round figures, $3,500,000 gross, equivalent to $1,175,000 net, being more than double the interest on its bonded debt. After deducting fixed charges, now aggregating $720,313, there will remain at least a net surplus available for dividends of $854,687, or an amount in excess of 7 1-2 per cent. on the entire capital stock issue.

A syndicate of Philadelphia capitalists recently made a proposition to form a leasing company, take over the management of the Detroit United, and guarantee dividends, beginning with 4 per cent. per annum and increasing 1-2 per cent. each year until 6 1-2 per cent. annually should be paid and continued during the life of the lease.

This proposition was rejected.

At this writing I am reliably informed that the Bankers' Committee of Cleveland, holding in trust the Everett-Moore Syndicate holdings of Detroit United, have practically concluded negotiations for the sale of 20,000 shares to an Eastern syndicate. The remaining 10,600 shares are to be withdrawn from the market.

The withdrawal of this stock from the market, which has heretofore been the cause of existing sacrifice quotations on Detroit United, marks the present level as the low record prices from now on. It is a noteworthy fact, of interest to the probable purchaser, that during the past week the market for Detroit United has broadened perceptibly. Buying orders for the stock in blocks are in evidence from Eastern purchasers. Heretofore the market has been confined to Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Louisville. Now, what will be the effect on current quotations, with demand for the stock from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Chicago, and St. Louis? I repeat that these actually existing conditions mean a long advance ahead, and those among my readers who want to make not only a good investment, but a long profit as well, had better get in the band wagon not later than Monday noon, for late arrivals will have to go way back and sit down if they expect to get any stock under 75.

One of the chief objections to investors heretofore has been the fact that last year the Detroit United accumulated a floating debt of $300,000, resulting, not from any deficit in operating, but from the purchase of 75 per cent. of the capital stock of the Detroit & Port Huron Shore Line and the Windsor Street Railway, both of which properties, though controlled by the Detroit United, are not included in the consolidation. This floating debt has now been entirely eliminated by the issue of $1,000,000 4 1-2 per cent. bonds, which were sold to E. H. Gay & Co., of Boston, and [illegible] offered by them for public subscription.

This leaves the property in excellent condition financially, with valuable assets in the controlling stocks referred to. Physically the property is conceded to have no superior in any city in the United States or Canada.

Detroit United Railway 4 per cent stock is [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] during the last few weeks an active market in Detroit United may be [illegible] [illegible] accompanied by a higher level of prices.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD

Holds First Place in the Piano World.

Here's a piano that's the cynosure of all eyes. Musical critics know it as an instrument that holds a place by itself among Canadian made pianos—and that ranks with foreign pianos of widest reputation. It is the ideal piano.

At all great functions and musical events it is the choice of the greatest artists. It is the piano that was the choice of Royalty—being used exclusively on the royal train by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York in their journey through Canada.

BRITISH WARSHIPS WANT OVERHAULING

Vickers Projectiles Pierced Twelve Inch Armour

Necessity Shows for Costly Reconstructive and Partial Rearmament of a Large Number of Battleships

London, May 30.—An outcome of the gunnery experiments which were witnessed at the Harrow by the Lords of the Admiralty, when "the Johnson cap," which is used in the American and other navies, but not in the British navy, was fitted to shells, was that the projectile from a six inch Vickers gun perforated a Krupp six inch armor, and with high velocity power it pierced a twelve inch armor.

In an editorial on these experiments, the Times this morning says it believes they show the necessity of very costly reconstruction and partial rearmament of a large number of battleships, which, although not very modern, yet are reckoned among the most effective of Great Britain's fighting ships. This is certainly an urgent necessity, says the paper, and the immediate adoption of the capped shot is indicated. The necessity of quick firing guns in the British navy larger than the six inch gun also is indicated.

"It is obviously of vital importance," says the Times, "that a naval war should never find our fleets as the South African war found our troops. With our guns outranged and outclassed, once more it is being made unpleasantly plain that there is no finality in naval programs. It behooves us not only to be wise, but to be wise in time."

Still she looked at Aleck in her piteous despair.

"Are you quite sure it is as he says, Aleck?— must I be torn from your arms — and— and— go with him?"

"I am sure of it, whether he is or not!" said Harold St. John, fiercely. "He will do well not to interfere between us."

In her great, intense excitement, Daisy did not notice how her father had fallen back, like one stricken dead, as the awful truth fell from the minister's lips, and how Hetty and Olive had flown to his side, bending over him, piteously begging him to open his eyes and speak to them —for the old squire had never swooned in all his vigorous life before.

Suddenly the dim church and the dark aisle— the faces of Aleck and Harold St. John seemed to whirl around her. It was heaven's mercy that unconsciousness robbed her of sense and feeling.

"Good- bye," Aleck murmured, letting his eyes linger for one moment on the face lying so still and white against the chancel rail— then while he had strength he tore himself away, and a moment later, despite the entreaties of both Olive and Hetty Gordon to keep Daisy with them for a little while longer— until she recovered from the awful shock this terrible affair had occasioned— Harold St. John raised her quickly in his arms, bearing her swiftly to a coach he had in waiting.

"You have just one hour to catch the express that leaves the cross-station below here," he said; "you will get ten dollars if you make it."

The driver touched his cap.

"Depend upon it, you shall get there in time," and away dashed the mettlesome horses with the speed of the wind.

Suddenly the coach came to a dead stop.

"Well, what is the matter now?" St. John cried out impatiently.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Conclusion.

Before the man could reply a voice like a bugle blast thundered out:

"Halt, in the name of the law!"

A volley of oaths broke from St. John's lips.

"Drive ahead!" he yelled to the coachman on the box; "a hundred dollars if you make that train."

"But I can't, sir," answered the man. "Don't you see a blue- coat holding on the the horses' head, and hear what he says?"

With a terrible imprecation St. John sprang from the vehicle, and with one leap was on the driver's box and had grasped the reins.

With one cut of the whip the horses had dashed forward, dragging the officer after them in their mad race until he was obliged to loosen his hold, but not until every bullet in the revolver he grasped with his disengaged hand was emptied, which only accelerated the speed of the maddened beasts.

Twenty minutes later a mounted officer dashed up to the railway telegraph office.

"I shall have you yet, my bird," he muttered grimly, throwing himself from the saddle and dashing into the telegraph office.

A moment later the following message was flashed over the wires:

"Arrest and hold at next station until I come on, Harold St. John, who is on train due there at 10.30." Then followed an accurate description of St John, with the added information: "A small, golden- haired lady would be found accompanying him —per force."

"Now then, my bird, I can follow you at my leisure," muttered the officer, calmly awaiting the next train

It is ten days since the event narrated in the beginning of this chapter

And on the morning of this day Daisy had opened her eyes to consciousness [illegible] last she closed them in that dim old church mid such a thrilling scene —opened them to find herself at home —yes —home, on her own white bed, with Hetty and Olive bending over her.

"Have I been asleep, and dreaming horrible dreams?" she murmured faintly.

"You have been very ill, dear — for the past ten days," sobbed Hetty "You were stricken down with brain fever —thank heaven you have passed the crisis in safety."

But at that moment a full consciousness of all that had transpired rushed over Daisy; she gave one piercing shriek:

"Oh, God! —I —I remember— all — they said I must go with — with his —what became of him? —Where is he?"

[illegible] he will never trouble you [illegible] answered Hetty gravely, proceeding to give her a [illegible] account of all that had transpired, as was related by the officer, who had come up to the church door just as St John, with Daisy in his arms, was leaving it: of the desperate chase, and how he had telegraphed ahead to the officers of the station above to arrest St. John on the arrival of the train.

But Providence had taken the matter out of the hands of man. The train never arrived at the station; instead, there was a terrible railroad accident —a broken rail caused the engine and [illegible] to fly the track, and they were precipitated forty feet into a ravine below.

It had been a horrible holocaust When they removed the wreck, Daisy by a miraculous fate, was found but slightly bruised about the head, but babbling in the ravages of brain fever.

Harold St. John was found beside her, dead —crushed and mangled beneath one of the wheels.

"Listen, darling," continued Hetty "the most startling part of the story which I have to tell you, is yet to come. You are not Harold St John's wife, nor have you ever been The villain's [illegible] was but

DOMINION BANK MEETING

Gratifying Financial Statement Submitted by Directors

We once again congratulate the General Manager and Directors of the Dominion Bank on the splendid condition of the bank, as shown by the financial statements submitted at the thirty-first annual general meeting of the shareholders on Wednesday last.

The profits of the year were $353,172, which, with the premium received on new stock, allowed dividends aggregating 10 per cent. to be paid during the year; $59,706 to be transferred to the reserve fund, and a balance of $205,265 carried forward to next year. The total of the reserve fund now amounts to $2,500,000. New branches have been opened at Gravenhurst, Wingham, Toronto and Stanstead, Quebec, and one will shortly be opened at London. The directors elected for the ensuing year were:—Messrs. A. W. Austin, W. R. Brock, M.P., T. Eaton, J. J. Foy, K.C., Wm. Ince, Wilmot D. Matthews, and E. B. Osler, M.P., and at a subsequent meeting of the directors, Mr. E. B. Osler, M.P., was elected President, and Mr. W. D. Matthews vice-president. The full report will be found in another column.

CARD OF THANKS

To the Electors of East Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—I desire to take the earliest opportunity to thank you for the grand majority your support has contributed in giving me in East Peterborough.

I have to thank those who actively assisted me upon the platform, in the committee rooms, or otherwise, and in fine to thank all of the electors who in any way helped my success. I assure you all that I am deeply gratified and it shall be my earnest and honest endeavour to merit to the fullest extent the flattering confidence that has been reposed in me. All the reward I can give is to serve East Peterborough—the villages as well as the rural sections—to the very best of my ability, and advance their interests every way in my power.

Again thanking you all, I remain gentlemen,

Yours Gratefully,
WM. ANDERSON,
Otonabee, May 30th 1902.

To the Electors of West Peterborough:

Gentlemen,— Permit me to most cordially thank you for the united support given me in the election contest of the 29th of May, which resulted in honouring me with the largest majority ever given a candidate in West Peterborough. When all has done so well I cannot particularize. I might, however, specially thank the working supporters who have in my frequent and necessary absence from the riding so faithfully and effectively promoted the interests of my candidature. I heartily appreciate their efforts. Indeed, every class of the electors, the working man, the business man, the farmer, and all classes, deserve, and have, my hearty thanks for the support they have given me.

You all know me. You all know my record, and I feel that your faith in my efforts to serve the riding, and to advance all its interests will not be strengthened by any promises I may make. I may, however, assure you that in the future, as in the past, I will do everything in my power to practically recognize that the interests of the town and county, and West Peterborough, have the first call upon my best efforts. Thanking you again in the most hearty way possible for your deeply appreciated support and confidence, I remain,

Very gratefully and faithfully yours
J. R. STRATTON,
Peterborough, May 30th, 1902.

Miss White, foreign missionary, of Indore, Central India, will be present and give several addresses dealing with matters of importance in connection with work in India. All who are interested in missions should hear Miss White as her addresses are very interesting and helpful.

The ladies of St. Paul's will serve tea in the school room from 6 to 7 p.m., on [illegible] lecture room, a [illegible] been provided for the convenience of the many delegates who are expected to be present.

TALKS OUT

Doctor Talks About Food

It is often the case that doctors themselves drift into bad habits of food and drink although they know better, but doctors are human you know like the rest of us, but when they get into trouble they generally know better how to get out of it, and the "food route" is a common one among them.

Dr. H. Barber of Laurel, Ind. concluded that coffee and badly selected food were the cause of his stomach trouble and his loss of weight from 184 pounds to 160 pounds with nerves impaired and general nervous breakdown.

He did not give coffee up at once but began the use of Grape-Nuts and says, "Within a month I could see a wonderful change had taken place due to the use of the new food. I decided to give up coffee and use Postum in its place. So regularly for a time I have been on a breakfast made up of Grape-Nuts, a little graham bread, and Postum Food Coffee. My weight has increased to 174 pounds, my stomach trouble has entirely gone and my mind is clear and vigorous as ever. Wishing you every success, I beg to assure you of my warm appreciation of Grape-Nuts and Postum."

BOARD OF TRADE

will never submit to a tax on her food supplies. What Canada must do is to devote all her energies toward building up her industries.

Mr. Dumble submitted that the people should be protected from excessive freight tolls on the part of Railway Companies, and favored the appointment of a Railway commission to regulate freight rates, the excessiveness of which in a great measure is due to an unwarrantable watering of railway stocks.

DEFENCE

The subject of Defence was coupled with the names of Mr. E. B. Edwards and Mr. J. W. Garvin.

Mr. Edwards thought that this question must sooner or later arise. Canada is seeking a place with other nations, and may very well say the time is coming, or has come, when she will take her part in the defence of the Empire, which has hitherto been wholly assumed by the Mother Land.

He argued that any statesman taking part in the great Imperial Conference, should be prepared to say that Canada is willing to assume a fair share in the Empire's defence.

Mr. Edwards moved, seconded by Mr. Garvin, that it is resolved that Canada having attained such a growth and standing and to warrant her in aspiring to hold a position as a nation amongst the nations of the earth, and being determined to maintain the position which she already holds as the premier colony of the British Empire, it is incumbent on the Government and the people to assume a fair share of the burden of defence, which her position calls for, regard being had to her resources as well in money as in men.

Mr. O'Connell took exception to this resolution because it did not implicitly specify that Canada should assume a position of defence only. He claimed that its wording implied an assumption of a share of the whole Empire's defence in general.

Mr. Garvin took the ground that in defending herself, Canada must necessarily be taking a part in the defence of the Empire of which she is so important a member.

Mr. Edwards remarked that the day may come when Canada will assume even a portion of the maintenance of that navy which protects her shores.

Mr. Poussette agreed with Mr. Edwards in this respect and argued that it might be fair for Canada to assist in maintaining that fleet which is today stationed in the North Atlantic waters in her defence.

Mr. Meldrum, for his part, was quite willing to pay his share for the defence of Canada, but he was not prepared to contribute to the defence of any other portion of the Empire.

The resolution was here voted on and resulted in a tie.

In addition to the above resolutions adopted the Board favored a reduction in postal rates on newspapers and magazines and the appointment of a Railway Commission to regulate freight rates in protection of producers.

Messrs. D. W. Dumble and W. H. Meldrum are the delegates who will attend the conference in Toronto.

A Splendid Investment

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of Mr. Claude Ashbrooke, Cincinatti, O., broker and dealer in stocks and bonds. Here is a safe and profitable investment, and one that is deserving of the attention of Canadian investors.

Gentlemen Who are Bald

BASEBALL.

The Cobourg baseball team will play the local nine this afternoon. The match begins at 3.30 on the Nicholls oval. There should be a large attendance.

The [illegible] Murray St. school, played the junior team of the South Ward school, last evening, defeating them by a score of 18—12.

BOWLING.

Bowling has been quiet this season so far, on account of the election, no doubt. The sport should take a good start next week.

LACROSSE.

The lacrosse match last night between the Y.M.C.A and the Athletics resulted in a draw. The game was fast from start to finish, both teams playing good lacrosse, but roughness at times was noticeable. A large crowd witnessed the game. Mr. Begley acted as referee and H. Ayers field captain for the Y.M.C.A. and J. Picard for the Athletics.

The Home of Peruna

The Hartman Sanitarium,
Columbus, Ohio.

As is well known, Dr. Hartman is the president of the Hartman Sanitarium, an institution which has a department devoted exclusively to the treatment of female diseases. He is thus brought to see thousands of such cases every year, the most of whom return to their homes to be treated by correspondence. The principal remedy he relies upon in such cases is Peruna, which every woman should have, who has any affection of this kind.

THE GREATEST OF AMERICA'S SANITARIUMS.

In view of the great multitude of women suffering from some kind of female disease, and yet unable to find any cure, Dr. Hartman, the renowned gynaecologist, has announced his willingness to direct the treatment of as many cases as may make application to him during the summer months without charge.

The treatment will be conducted by correspondence. The doctor will prescribe all medicines, applications, hygienic and dietary regulations necessary to complete a cure. The medicines prescribed can be obtained at all drug stores. This offer will prevail during the summer months. Any woman can become a regular patient by sending a written statement of her age, condition of life, history and symptoms of her derangements.

All cases of female diseases, including menstrual irregularities, displacements, ulcerations, inflammations, discharges, irritation of the ovaries, tumors and dropsy of the abdomen, should apply at once and become registered as regular patients. All correspondence will be held strictly confidential. No testimonials of cures will be given to the public except by the express wish of the patient.

No one knows better than Dr. Hartman how much the women suffer with diseases peculiar to their sex. No one knows better than he does how many of them suffer with such diseases. Patiently, hopefully, wearily, and often silently, they eke out a miserable existence year after year.

A woman confined to the house several years with a chronic female derangement had finally given up all hope of being cured. She had tried physician after physician, and remedy after remedy, without any permanent improvement. Her treatment had cost her husband, who was a poor man, hundreds of dollars. They had been obliged to deny themselves many comforts of life in order to get money enough to pay the physicians.

DISEASES PECULIAR TO THE FEMALE SEX.

Picking up the paper one day she happened to read an item which contained the news that Dr. Hartman would treat such cases free of charge by letter. She immediately wrote the doctor, describing her case, and giving him all her symptoms. She soon received a letter telling her exactly what to do and what medicines and appliances to get. She began the treatment (the principal remedy being Peruna) at once, and in a few weeks was well and strong again and able to do her own work.

ONE OF THE 200,000 WOMEN HELPED LAST YEAR.

"Peruna is wonderful and good, and a certain cure for female weakness. I have been ill and have been taking doctor's medicine for several years, and found that none did me any good.

"Every day it was a worry. I was always sick. I had come to the conclusion to give up, and not use any more medicine. I was sick indeed for the past two years. Just before I began to take Peruna I was very weak, besides I was bilious and constipated.

"I had pains in my back and side and falling of the womb, with bearing down pains.

"One day while reading my newspaper, I came across an ad., read of the book for women entitled, "Health and Beauty," and sent for it. Then I began to use Peruna. After using several bottles I am now thoroughly cured."—MISS IDA GREEN.

Mrs. Theresa Keller, of Fremont, Wash., writes:

"Peruna not only cured me of female trouble but prevents me catching any cold, and as long as I have a bottle in the house my family needs no doctor."—Mrs. Theresa Keller.

Send for free book entitled, "Health and Beauty." Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.
